ALONG THE GOLDEN FOOTHILLS.

NATURE beckons, beckons. The mountains call, the hills shout, and the vales cry to us to come out and behold their splendor of color and the wealth of beauty in which they are robed. There is no fairer picture beneath the sun than that which is spread before us here upon every side, and no lover of nature can resist the invitation which calls us to come out of doors into the golden world of sunshine and of bloom. Come out, come out! is the irresistible cry which we hear on every hand, and with smiling faces and joyous hearts the dwellers in this Land of Sunshine wander forth into the sun-flooded day, fanned by delicious breezes from the sea, breathing the fragrance of countless flowers, taking in the vastness of wide-extending plains, the beauty of the rounded hills, and the sublime grandeur of the mighty uplift of magnificent mountain ranges that are forever voiceful of Omnipotence.

Take the trip from Los Angeles eastward into the foothills of the Sierra Madre, for instance, and you will find the poverty of words to describe it. There is an infinite variety of landscape along the way, and more beautiful pictures than an artist could put upon his canvas in a long lifetime. The real lover of nature experiences a feeling of relief as the swiftly-moving car takes him out beyond the rush and bustle of the city's streets into the beautiful, wide expanses of the country, where the broad, meadow-like reaches unfold and the tree-dotted hills rise, and beyond is the eternal majesty of the lofty mountain heights. There is no sameness, no dull monotony in the country lying between Los Angeles and the easterly foothills. It is as if we were looking through a vast kaleidoscope exhibiting an endless variety of colors and changes. Here the fields stretch far out to the purple haze of the hills; there the hills come down and almost touch the track over which we ride; some are clothed with emerald grasses, others are tree-crowned and flower-gemmed, and are drinking in all the full glory of the sunlight. Upon some of them are built beautiful homes, many of them in the old mission style, which seem like voices of the past as we go by—the past of another race which has almost disappeared from our midst today, leaving only here and there a trace of its vanished life.

We see the new life represented as we pass on in the stately architecture of the Occidental College buildings and in the many beautiful modern homes that have been reared along the way, and which seem to tell of a better tomorrow. Lovely Garvanza sits upon her eminence as if beckoning to the home-seeker, and the level expanses within her view seem to cry, "Room for hundreds here, and beauty for them all; let them come!"

On a little farther and there lies the ostrich farm, under the shelter of the tree-dotted hills upon one side, while the vista opens wider upon the other. The grounds about the place are beautiful, for the landscape gardener has been there and art and nature are wedded, and Beauty stood sponsor at their bridal. Lovely are the groves and shaded nooks, the fragrant flowers and the crystal fountains that meet the eye, and sweet the song of unnumbered birds that flutter amid the branches of the trees. It is a very garden of delights, a place to hold "communion with Nature in her visible forms" and learn the language in which she speaks to the heart.

But the ostriches, they are well worth our careful study. Two hundred of them are gathered here; long-limbed and long-necked, they are not creatures of beauty, for the neck and legs are bare of feathers, but the body and wings, covered with the beautiful feathers, challenge our admiration. The ostrich often lives to the age of seventy years, and they mate when four years old, and this mating is for life. There is none of the fickleness and lack of fidelity that is growing to be so common among the wedded of the human race, but through the long, long years they are true to the one choice that they make in their early life. Is there not a lesson in this for humanity in an age when the divorce evil is one of the darkest blots upon our modern civilization?

But we will toss the ostriches some oranges and then move on. Their great bills are opened and with wonderful dexterity they catch the oranges as they are thrown, and swallow them whole. We can trace them as they slip down the long canal-like throat and count them by the bulging skin which covers them. "How many will they eat at one meal?" we inquire of an attendant. "That one over there has eaten thirty," was the response.

We glide onward toward Pasadena. How beautiful are the homes that crown her heights, and the groves and orchards that nestle at their feet. And the Raymond, what a grand outlook it commands from the summit upon which it stands, of mountain, hill and vale, and how beautiful its blossoming gardens, its countless shade trees, and its wealth of color.

Then farther on rises the Hotel Green, palace-like in its proportions, surrounded by beautiful park-like inclosures, where one may sit and hold communion with Nature in her loveliest forms. Pasadena! Rightly is she named, for "Crown of the Valley" she truly is, and no city of fairer homes can be found anywhere under the blue of our skies than she. Yet twenty-five years ago the spot was hardly more than a great sheep pasture, a city unborn, but her site of marvelous beauty was pregnant with the wonderful charm of today.

But Altadena! The swiftly-moving car bears us up to her high slopes, past her great golden poppy fields, spread like a sunset cloud upon her hills. Here vast orchards stand now bursting into the blossoming of May. The rich pink peach bloom is upon the trees, the loquat's branches are laden with their rich fruitage, the long slopes are green with beautiful orchards; far, far away the broad fields at their base stretch out to the blue line of the hills, and here the wide, fertile expanses within view seem to cry, "Room for the farmer here, room for the horticulturist, room for a thousand homes; let them be builded here in this region of beauty and delight!"

But we turn to the background, that wonderful sierra wall which rises sheer upward thousands of feet above the valley's floor. Here you stand face to face with its mysteries. You confront its pinnacles and domes, and see its higher crests, snow-crowned and white as hoary winter in the East. The snows glisten in the light of our semi-tropic suns, but no chill reaches us from those lofty heights; we breathe an atmosphere of balm and fragrance, and the soft breezes of summer fan us.

How wonderful the mountains! The great cañons open before us, those vast defiles leading into the very heart of the sierras. We see the trail leading to the summit of Wilson's Peak, 7000 feet high. Upon its crest grow the giant pines, here so plainly visible, and behind us we can trace the line of railroad which climbs Echo Mountain, and winds on and on over and around the towering peaks to those upper mountain recesses where stands the "Alpine Tavern." What a spot! Summer below and around you, and snow-crowned winter above your head!

As we stand here in this great hush of Nature, thinking of the busy, strenuous life below us, can we not see some of the great mistakes we make in living, and may we not accept the fact that we have time enough to do all that we ought to do, all that God wants us to do, if we will only use the time aright. But we live too fast and wear out too soon. We crowd the work of a week into a day. We waste strength and energy upon trifles, and let the great, grand things of life slip by us. But let us climb to these heights sometimes, and we shall find life here good because it is restful. It is grand because the petty things of life cannot live where Nature is so voiceful of greatness. Nature is in keeping with our better thoughts. Then let us heed her as she beckons us to come out and be with her beneath her sun and stars.

And above us her starry tapers gleam,
While we lie in her arms adream, adream.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

SECRETARY TREGEAR TELLS HOW HIS COLONY HANDLES THEM.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—I give you today an interview which I have just received from the leading authority on capital and labor of what many consider the most advanced labor country of the world. It comes from the other side of the globe, away down below the equator, from the colony of New Zealand. It is written by the Hon. Edward Tregear, who for the past fifteen years has been secretary of labor for that colony, and who has always been one of the prime movers in New Zealand's experiments in the labor problem. The interview is in response to questions which I sent Mr. Tregear several months ago, and it gives the situation as regards labor and capital in that country in 1904.

New Zealand's Secretary for Labor.

It is now four years since I met Secretary Tregear in his office at the labor department in Wellington, New Zealand. He is a bright-eyed, scholarly looking man of perhaps forty-five years of age. He is thoroughly posted on the labor situation, and especially on all things connected with labor in Australia and New Zealand. During our chat he told me what the government was then doing to reconcile the troubles of labor and capital; how it had established the weekly half-holiday, had practically fixed the forty-eight hour week, and how it was to some extent regulating trusts and the accumulation of large fortunes. He said that the workingmen of the country had become the preponderating influence in political life, and their success had been won not through violence, but by reasoning out the matter on the stump and thereby getting the balance of power in Parliament. Mr. Tregear thought that New Zealand's efforts toward equalizing the rights of man would be imitated by other countries. He said the colony was steadily advancing, and that he hoped great things for the future. That was in the year 1900. Here is what he says of the situation today. The questions interspersed through the interview are mine:

Industrial New Zealand in 1904.

"DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
"Wellington, N. Z., 15th of March, 1904.

"My Dear Mr. Carpenter: It is not easy to condense in a single article answers to the large, social and economic questions you ask me, but I will do my best. You ask whether organized labor has been for the good of this colony? I believe that the organization of labor in New Zealand has been productive of much good, both to employer and employed. It has allowed industrial affairs to be looked at from a calm, collective standpoint. The employers have met the organizations of their men by forming similar unions and associations among themselves, so that in regard to the conditions of wages, hours, etc., in a trade the personality of the individual counts little and his energies have to be turned to his own more perfect work and the improvement of methods and materials rather than to the grosser sorts of trade competition.

"'The sweater' has been eliminated, and the honest employer, who wishes to pay fair wages, is encouraged by the absence of the commercial pirate. Moreover, employers are not at the mercy of their men in critical times.

"On the part of the workers themselves organization has helped enormously to better their condition. The trade unions have been mostly superseded by industrial unions registered under the arbitration act, and such unions can do nothing directly to raise the wages of their members. They have, however, great political and social influence."

[illegible] People Run New Zealand.

"We have understood that the trade unions run the country?"

"The unions do not 'run the country,' as their enemies assert. There are only 23,000 unionists workers in New Zealand out of a population of 840,000 persons with adult suffrage of both sexes, so their votes cannot run the country. Their influence, however, by their solidarity and intelligence, is very great; no politician can disregard it, therefore they can bring pressure on legislation.

"Economically the unions advantage labor indirectly, but very weightily, through industrial conciliation and arbitration court. Unions induce a feeling of comradeship; they have helped to advance wages, shorten hours, gain paid holidays and half-holidays, and limited the number of boy workers.

"The third party, the public, generally unconsidered in such matters, no longer has to bear the danger, annoyance and loss through disturbance of trade and of industry caused by employer and employé fighting out their quarrels and pretending to decide questions of right and wrong by methods of brute force—for the [illegible] can be as brutal a weapon as the club."

Wages Steady and Advancing.

"What about wages?"

"Wages in the colony rise and fall but little; they have been steadily advancing of late years. They differ according to climatic conditions in different parts of the colony, but they average fairly as follows: Ordinary laborers, $2 a day; farm laborers, $5 to $6.50 a week and found; carpenters, $2.50 a day; plumbers, $2.50; bricklayers, $3 to $4; painters, $2.25; bootmakers, $10.50 to $15 per week (but most on piecework;) order tailors, $2.50; plasterers, $3 station hands (cowboys,) $5 to $6 a week and found; shepherds, $375 to $425 a year and found."

Women as a Labor Factor.

"Give me some idea of your women unionists."

"Our women take but little share in organized labor. With the exception of the Dunedin tailoresses, who number about 500, there are no influential or active women's unions. This arises partly because the inspectors of factories and shops look with unremitting vigilance after the wages, overtime pay, holidays, etc., of the women and girls, so that there is no pressure necessitating unionism. Moreover, probably the want of cohesion in the sex when engaged in the industrial work of this country has effect here as elsewhere. There are no women members of men's unions. We have 'woman suffrage,' and our feminine electors exert steady political influence in certain directions—such as temperance—but their industrial position does not seem to need interference.

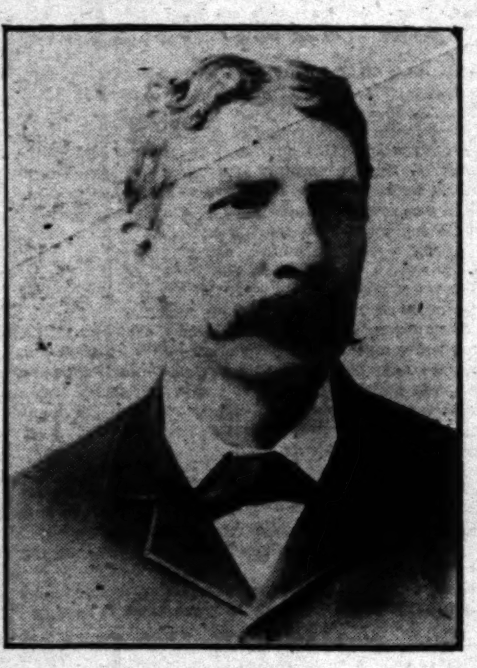
The Eight-hour Day

"Does the eight hours increase drunkenness?"

"It would certainly be a slander on our working classes if anyone accused them of drunkenness. There is more drunkenness in Glasgow or in Moscow in a night than in New Zealand in a year. To say that an eight-hour day leads to drunkenness and loafing is rubbish. The overtired man who has worked too long is he who craves a stimulant.

"After eight hours of active and often strenuous labor leisure is not loafing and the accusation sometimes comes with a very bad grace from people who are either idlers themselves or engaged in predatory industry.

"The vices of the colonist are not drunkenness, but gambling and devotion to low ideals, the worship of the race horse and of the football.



HON. EDWARD TREGEAR.

"It is not probable that any shorter working day than that of eight hours will obtain for several years, but I hope that as machinery takes the place of sinew, and when the machine is owned by the man who works it, 'plain living and high thinking' may help to a very few hours a day having to be necessarily worked by anyone. Exertion on a loved and fancied line of direction is, of course, under different conditions, and time so spent will never be measured."

Short Hours and Old Age Pensions.

"Does not the eight-hour day encourage extravagance?"

"As to extravagance, the shorter working day has had if anything a beneficial effect in the direction of economy, if the savings banks statistics be accepted as a test. Personally, I hate hearing thrift preached to persons of low incomes. Below a certain wage line every penny saved is a sin against the workers' family, depriving them of some necessity of life. It is enough of thrift for such a one to be insured, or in a friendly society to guard against sickness or accident or death. The working father or mother who has brought up a family has, at the cost of a thousand self-denials and deprivations, performed a most valuable duty to the State, and should be provided for in his or her old age by the State whose future has been thus nourished, even if it means heavy taxation of those who have had better opportunities of acquiring money or property by shirking the responsibilities of fostering large families. In New Zealand, through our old age pensions, we partly meet our moral and national liabilities, but much more will yet have to be done by the English-speaking peoples if they wish to make their nations in the future anything more than mixtures of mongrel aliens.

Employment Bureaus for Uncle Sam.

"Concerning your question as to the employment branch of the New Zealand labor department, and whether such an office would succeed in America, I consider it has been a success here and see no reason why it should not be useful in the States. Since 1891 we have assisted 32,382 men, and these had 70,770 dependants, so that 103,152 persons have been benefited. This does not include the thousands who take advantage of our information offices all over the country—the figures given above are of those who received actual assistance in railway and steamer fares, etc., in order to 'bring the work and the worker together.'

"Our clients receive no charity or monetary assistance; we only find hard work for them. The expenses of transit have to be refunded, and, contrary to the belief of the pessimist, they are refunded, in the large majority of cases. No better test of the value of the work so done can be given than by the way the operatives and laboring classes stand by us; it is a dangerous experiment in New Zealand to abuse its labor department in public."

Chances for Young Men.

"What does your government offer to immigrants, and what are the chances for young men to make fortunes in New Zealand?"

"The government offers no special inducements to immigrants, and it has not done so for many years. Last year we had a surplus of 12,000 arrivals over our departures, but of these 10,000 were Australians, driven out by the drought in their own country. Most of the people who come here, excepting the tourists, stay with us. New Zealand is a lovely land, and it is full of attractions. It offers a good field for steady, honest living. Young men have many opportunities to secure comfortable incomes, and at the end of life financial independence. As to the probabilities of their becoming millionaires, I am glad to say they are nil."

New Zealand Prosperous.

"What is the condition of New Zealand?"

"The country has been for years progressing rapidly, and in spite of croakers against 'labor as king,' we flourish more and more. The hands in factories have nearly doubled in number during eight years; they rose from 29,879 in 1895 to 59,047 in 1903. Agricultural and pastoral employments have also been in a prosperous condition, as shown by the value of our exports, chiefly wool, frozen meat, butter, etc., advancing at a leap of £3,016,713 (about $14,500,000,) in 1903, over those of the previous year."

How Government Ownership Works.

"Does it pay you to have the government run the railroads?"

"New Zealand through taking over the railroads, telegraph lines, etc., as national property has won great advantages. Such action secures the people against combinations in regard to oppressive prices for fares and freights, prevents 'discriminations' and gives back to the people the profits made through the use of railways and telegraphs by the people. On its being found that the New Zealand railways were making greater profits than were necessary to pay interest on the cost of construction, fares and freights were immediately lowered very considerably. Special benefits are granted to agriculturists and those 'far back;' lime for manuring purposes, boxes for fruit, etc., are carried free, while the freight for fruit is almost nominal.

"Railways and telegraphs working together save much expense in officials, correspondence, etc. The disadvantage of having telegraph lines in private hands was shown in England during the Boer war, when the confidential telegrams to the crown ministers leaked out to financiers before the messages were delivered. Here the public are not hustled and hectored by their own officers as they are by servants of companies, nor are the lives of the officials and laborers recklessly sacrificed to make fat dividends.

Coal Mines Run by the Government.

"The government is opening up coal mines. The mines now being privately worked will probably not be interfered with for a long time, but by having national mines the formation of rings and monopolies can be prevented through the market being regulated by coal, sold at cost price if it is thought fit.

"The government life insurance department, the public trust office, which administers the estates of deceased persons; the advances to settlers department, enabling struggling farmers to pay off old and costly mortgages through cheap government loans; the land for settlement department, breaking up big estates by resumption and cutting them up into small farms—all these departments are doing beneficial and profitable work.

"The agricultural department, by grading butter, cheese and flax, by distributing superior seeds, eggs, etc., and by fighting insect pests, is of great use to the community."

New Zealand Versus the United States.

"Would your labor laws do equally well in so large a country as ours?"

"It is true that New Zealand is a tiny land compared with the United States, and our legislation is often referred to as experimental. There are, however, certain natural and personal laws as imperative in one place, however large, as in another, however small. Stones do not fall upwards in America more than in New Zealand, nor can a workman on a strike keep his family on air in one locality more than in another. The New Zealander removes his industrial disputes from the vicinity of the labor boss, the armed picket and the State militia to the calm rational atmosphere of a court, which examines his claim, sees if the employer is getting unfair profits out of his men, and gives the workman for a fixed time a minimum wage for his work, while he can earn as much more as his employer likes to give him. The man need not work, nor his employer pay the minimum wage or any wage, but if he works at all at that trade he must not be 'sweated' nor may he under-cut his mates i wages."

The Arbitration Act for Uncle Sam.

"Could the Labor Arbitration Act be applied to the United States?"

"I cannot see why such industrial arbitration, proved to be of value in New Zealand, and adopted by the neighboring colonies which watched it working, should be deleterious to the United States. It is true that if it were adopted the presidents of your labor federations and other union bosses would shrink in power consumedly, and so would the trust magnates and 'bulldozers' of capital; but the gain to capital, labor and the public through having reasonable decisions by a judge in industrial matters instead of the arbitrament of the bully would be enormous.

How it Works in New Zealand.

"Our arbitration act here has steadied business, leveled up wages, protected the families of the worker, advanced the spending power of the masses (and therewith profits to employers,) mitigated the bitterness of class feeling formerly nourished in strike and lockout, and helped to neutralize uncertainty of employment. Exports, manufactures, distribution, settlement, all have flourished through or alongside this law's excellent existence.

"If this is my opinion, I am not alone. New South Wales followed us in adopting the regulation of industry called in America 'compulsory arbitration.' Its acting premier, speaking only last week at a public banquet, gave figures to show the growth of exports and manufactures, adding, ironically: 'I only quote the figures to show how socialistic legislation is driving capital out of the country.' He further stated that the growth of manufacturing interests during the next two years will be without parallel in the history of New South Wales.

"Progressive legislation of a similar character to that of New Zealand may be hurtful if introduced into America, but if it should be tried fairly, I believe it would mock the doleful prophecies of its present enemies as fully as it has shamed its former opponents in this colony. And they were not easily shamed.

[Signed] "EDWARD TREGEAR,
"Secretary of Labor."

In closing this letter I would say that I doubt whether the industrial conditions of the United States and New Zealand are so near alike that the same methods could successfully be applied to both. I thank Mr. Tregear for his opinions. They come not only from a great economic thinker, but from one who for fifteen years has been a practical working executive in the field of which he writes.

COMMENTS BY THE TIMES.

CASE IN WHICH DOCTORS DISAGREE.

The foregoing is of interest chiefly as showing to what lengths a person will go in supporting his own creation —for Secretary Tregear is in large measure responsible for present labor conditions in New Zealand. He naturally defends the system there, and all that he says must be taken with a large allowance of salt.

This is emphasized by the fact that one of the most rabid Socialists ever in Los Angeles, Arthur I. Carr, who was outspoken and loud in his advocacy of the New Zealand system, went to that place and after a careful study of it changed his views entirely, and in a letter written to The Times confessed that he had been misled, and that the system was proving a failure, not working out for the best interests of the people. He became as earnest in declaring its failure as he had once been in supporting it.

But even if the New Zealand system were the success Mr. Tregear pronounces it to be, it could not be successfully applied to other countries in which industrial conditions are so wholly different.

In his discussion of the eight-hour day, Mr. Tregear narrowly limits the value of it to the laboring man without explaining its effect upon employers and upon the industries themselves—in fact, he even goes so far as to hope for still shorter hours, apparently regardless of the effect of such a course upon the men who furnish the capital to keep industries in operation and who furnish the means by which the workingman gets his bread and butter. But narrowness is characteristic of mischievous unionism—its supporters look only upon one side and upon immediate results. They give no thought to the interests of their employers, nor do they see that ultimate results must prove disastrous to themselves. They are concerned only in a selfish attempt to get everything for themselves—and to get it at once.

The bowl fight in the spring is the greatest annual event at the University of Pennsylvania. Sophomores and freshmen battle around a bowl inscribed with the insignia of the classes. Ten-minute halves determine the contest. In the first the freshmen must get their bowlman over the fence before the sophomores touch the bowl for him. In the second half a general scrimmage rages around the bowl. At the call of time whichever side has the greatest number of hands on the bowl wins. This year the sophomores won, the first half being a draw, the second resulting in a "soph" victory.—[Leslie's Weekly.

RED CROSS DOGS.

THEY ACT AS NURSES ON BATTLEFIELDS AND HELP BOTH FRIEND AND FOE.

[Pittsburgh Press:] The idea of training dogs for use as nurses on the battlefield originated with the Italian government, although the first real test will take place in the conflict between Russia and Japan. That government has established a school at which the dogs are trained.

It is from this school that the dogs will be shipped to Korea, Manchuria and Siberia within the next two weeks.

One hundred and five collies have already received degrees from the school at Rome, and bear the medical kit on which flames a big Red Cross. Five hundred more are working hard for their diplomas, and it is from their ranks that the recruits for the Czar and the Mikado will be drawn.

For many months the Italian officials at Rome studied the best means of sending succor to the wounded under the conditions of modern warfare. To one the plan of the Hospice St. Bernard came as an inspiration, and a commission was sent to the monastery to see how the dogs were trained. Upon the recommendation of this commission a number of full bred and half-grown collie dogs were purchased.

Sanitary quarters were built for them at Rome, and under direction of the chief army surgeon a staff of assistants began the marvelous work of building up the canine brains to the plane of the Red Cross work.

It was not puppy play at all, and the little collies began to find life a very serious problem. Each dog was first examined by a medical inspector. If he were sound from tip of bushy tail to point of black nose, he matriculated. If the slightest defect was found he went back into the ordinary world of dogs. When twenty-five absolutely perfect collies had been obtained, the college started in business. Squads of five dogs formed the classes, and a trainer was assigned to each squad.

Instructions to the first class began last September. Five Italian soldiers were allowed six hours' start of the embryo nurses. They tramped in circular courses until it seemed impossible that the dogs would not be bewildered. After walking ten miles to a mountain pass, the soldiers lay down and waited for developments. Every collie hit the trail at once. Three of the soldiers were run down as quickly as the dogs could cover the ground. The other two were not discovered until sunset, but the searchers did not give up until all had been found.

By the end of the week the entire twenty-five dogs were being trained at trailing, and in a fortnight the whole brigade understood that when set at liberty it was the business of each dog to find a man.

The pack would start out noses to ground, and whining eagerly. In five minutes every dog had picked up a scent. If by any chance two dogs were after the same man the one coming in second invariably abandoned the old trail and started off upon a new one.

When all were sufficiently expert in trailing, gray blankets were strapped upon the backs of the pupils. Each blanket was marked with the symbol of the Red Cross and contained two capacious pockets.

In one knapsack-like receptacle were placed two flasks, one for water and the other for stimulant. Two flat biscuits were also placed in this pocket. The remaining pocket was supplied with a roll of bandages, a small adjustable splint, a soft silk handkerchief to be made into a sling, and a probing instrument such as every Italian soldier is taught to use.

Then began the second stage in the education of the canine nurse. The second lesson was in barking at the soldier whom he had trailed down until the soldier was sufficiently aroused to make use of the aid at hand. Then they were taught to guide wounded men to the hospital tents.

A more difficult step followed the second degree. The dogs had already learned how to trace down a wounded man, how to offer aid to him and how to guide him to the surgeons. How to summon assistance when the soldier could not help himself was another matter.

Only by infinite patience and labor were the dogs instructed upon this point. After a number of months they learned to send out a wail of distress that could be heard a great distance. A test of the length of time an able-bodied collie could keep up the howl was made. The surgeons gave out, however, before the dogs did, and the problem is still unanswered.

One more step and the preliminary education of the dogs was complete. They must be taught in extreme cases to hurry to the hospital tents for a surgeon and guide him to the sufferer. Before this problem was firmly grasped, the brains of the collies were taxed to the utmost. Still they did learn.

A second detail and a third were put through the paces, and under the combined instruction of the veterans and the trainers they learned even more quickly than their predecessors. Finally 105 highly trained collies went on the field, and the first brigade was ready for practical work. At last came the crucial test, the final examinations before the now half-human nurses could gain degrees. All had been trained under the most placid conditions, the trails leading through peaceful meadows and silent woodlands. The collie is a nervous dog, and his preceptors feared that in the inferno of battle he might run away.

Mock battles were ordered. Held in leash during the firing, the 105 dogs trembled and growled in abject terror. Slipped from the leashes they refused to seek the trails, and made for the rear as fast as fear could urge them on.

Apparently the experiment was a failure. But the trainers persisted. In less than two weeks the collies grew accustomed to the bark of the rifles, the thunder of the cannon and the powder smoke.

They trembled, but it was in eagerness to be a part of the conflict. When unleashed every one darted off like arrows to a mark.

In another week the dogs had learned to ing the firing, even when unchained, but the guns ceased to speak they were out on the

ONE LIVING REPRESENTATIVE OF THE SOUTHWEST PUEBLOS.

By a Special Contributor.

ONE of the most touching sights in "this vale of tears" is to see an old man or woman, who, bereft of all kith and kin, lives on through a lonely existence, apparently waiting in vain for the time when the angel of death shall call him or her to join the loved ones beyond the dark river. It is sad to think of these aged and feeble individuals having witnessed the death of their parents and their parents' parents, having reared large families only to see them taken from them one by one, their friends and childhood companions having passed to the great beyond, the good wife or husband, sharer in their life's struggle, called to join the rest, and they alone left to a friendless and comfortless old age. It is sad, too, to think that a family will disappear from the face of the earth without leaving any descendants when these sole survivors are likewise called to join the great majority. Sadder still is it when the death of one of these sole survivors marks the disappearance of an entire race, be it ever so weak, ignorant, and unimportant; but sadder, much sadder, when the sole fragment of this disappearing race can look back to ancestors proud and mighty, with a record second to none of the times, and to a time when his tribe represented the highest type of civilization and progress to be found on the continent.

At Jemez, New Mexico, lives an old Indian of uncertain age, who is probably the most interesting figure among the Southwestern aborigines. This Indian's name is Antonio Pecos, and he is the sole living representative of the Pecos tribe of the Pueblo Indians, the most powerful tribe of aborigines found by Coronado during his search for the seven cities of Cibola. Antonio, though he knows not his age, may be on either side of the century mark, judging from his appearance. Though the Pecos Indians, at the time of Coronado's entrance into New Mexico, were the most numerous and powerful tribe among the Pueblos, the time came when, through the ravages of disease, internal strifes, and warfare with other tribes, they became so decimated that for protection they removed to the Jemez pueblos of the Jemez, who were the only Indians in the Southwest that spoke the same language as the Pecos. At the Jemez pueblo, however, their star of ill fate pursued them; disease continued to make inroads in their already greatly reduced ranks, until all were taken except this one lone Indian, who has been living all these years sans progeny, sans posterity, sans everything except his own lonely existence; he is the sole human relic of a lost race. When this old man dies it will mark the disappearance, for all time, of the last vestige of a people who were once the foremost progressive power in what is now known geographically as the United States of America. A hundred miles away to the eastward of where this human relic dwells, on a bluff overlooking the Pecos River, is all that remains of the home of this great tribe, now a heap of crumbling ruins, the half-standing walls of what was once an immense church [illegible] stories high, scattered circular formations of stone, and numerous excavations. Where once stood an immense town, with buildings four and five stories high before the Anglo-Saxon had dreamed of such buildings, and where dwelt thousands of happy human beings, the owl, the bat, and the snake now hold sway.

[illegible], when Francisco Vasquez de Coronado entered New Mexico on his search for the fabled "seven cities of Cibola," he was visited by a party of natives from the [illegible] province of Cicuye who had much to say of the "cows," or buffaloes, of their country; [illegible] Coronado paid a visit to Cicuye, on the edge of the buffalo plains later known as the pueblo of Pecos, where he found dwelling a powerful tribe of people who amply fulfilled the promises of their emissaries in regard to friendliness. This was the most numerous tribe with which he came in contact, as well as the most progressive. Here Coronado was led on an expedition in search of the fabled treasures of Quivira through the wiles of an Indian who offered to guide them in their search. After months of wandering the guide confessed having led the Spaniards away at the instigation of the natives of Cicuye, or Pecos, in order to lose them. After putting the guide to death, the Spaniards returned to Pecos, where they committed outrages on the people. [illegible], when Castano went on his expedition to New Mexico by following up the course of the Pecos River from Texas, he was attacked by natives, who were behind the walls of a large town of high buildings situated on a bluff above the river. The natives stood upon the roofs in hostile attitude, and the town was attacked and taken by the Spaniards. This was the pueblo of Pecos. Bancroft says: "The Spaniards remained five or six days, admiring the many-storied houses, the five plazas, the sixteen estufas, the [illegible] stores of maize, amounting to 30,000 fanegas, the [illegible] of the men and women, the beautiful pottery and many other curious things."

The next record found in history concerning the Pecos tribe is during the Pueblo insurrection of 1680, when the tribe laid siege to Santa Fé and captured the city after a siege lasting five days. The Pecos Indians were reinforced by an army from Taos and other pueblos and the Spaniards were driven from the entire country, which again became governed by the Pueblos. After their success in this insurrection, the rebel Indians began to quarrel among themselves, pueblo against pueblo, and the Apaches and Utes took advantage of the situation to renew their raids and [illegible]. Not only thus were the apostates afflicted, but with hunger and pestilence. Neil says that "for seven years it 'rained ashes,' while for nine years no water fell, and the streams all dried up." Many pueblos were abandoned, sites of others were changed, and tribes were scattered. The Pecos Indians weathered this storm and retained their homes, though it left their ranks sadly thinned.

In 1700 a revolt was started in the pueblo of Pecos, resulting from the execution, by Don Felipe, the chief, of five rebels. The pueblo became divided into two factions, which fought with each other and accomplished much toward the further thinning of their ranks.

In 1746 the Pueblos being again at peace with the Spaniards, history records a raid made on Pecos by the Comanches, who killed many inhabitants of that pueblo.

In 1780-'81 an epidemic of smallpox carried off 5025 Indians of the mission pueblos of New Mexico, Pecos suffering most heavily. As a result of this loss of population, Gov. Anza reduced the number of pueblos by consolidation, the Pecos tribe joining the Jemez. The immense buildings which excited the wonder and admiration of the early explorers were left to fall into ruin, and their dead to the care of the prowling coyote.

In 1853 smallpox again carried off many Pueblos, although it is not recorded that the Pecos tribe was a sufferer. But such is no doubt the case, as in Army's report of 1871 it is recorded that only thirty-five Pecos Indians remain (living at Jemez.)

Although this remnant of the Pecos tribe has dwelt with the Jemez Indians, who speak the same language, they were compelled to retain their own tribal marital relations, the laws of the Pueblos forbidding the inhabitants of different pueblos to intermarry. This is an ancient custom of the Pueblos, and is still observed. Thus the Pecos tribe remained a distinct and separate family from the Jemez.

Many deaths occur annually among the Pueblos, as from their communistic way of living disease spreads rapidly. The population of each pueblo has diminished year by year. The Pecos remnant of 35 recorded in 1871 had diminished to one feeble old man, Antonio Pecos, when I visited the Jemez pueblo recently.

There are no mixed-blood descendants by which one can trace the tribe. He is the sole human vestige of the race. If the laws are just on this subject, there lies along the Pecos River in New Mexico 18,700 acres of valuable agricultural land which rightfully belongs to this old man. This land formerly comprised the pueblo grant of Pecos, and was recorded to their credit as late as 1860. But for the past fifteen years the taxes on this land have been paid by a prominent merchant firm of New Mexico, who, seeing the opportunity, have been keeping the taxes paid up to their credit.

The ruins of the old Pecos pueblo are situated along the route of the old Santa Fé trail, midway between the stations of Rowe and Glorieta on the Santa Fé Railroad. The bodies of the many victims of the disease and pestilence which annihilated this tribe were buried beneath the earthen floors of the immense church, the walls of which are yet standing. Many human skeletons and much pottery, silver jewelry, etc., have been dug up from beneath these ruins, and much is still to be found. Merely by prodding a stick into the ground, one can uncover many human bones.

THE FUTURE HOME OF THE NEW YORK JUVENILE ASYLUM.

From a Special Correspondent.

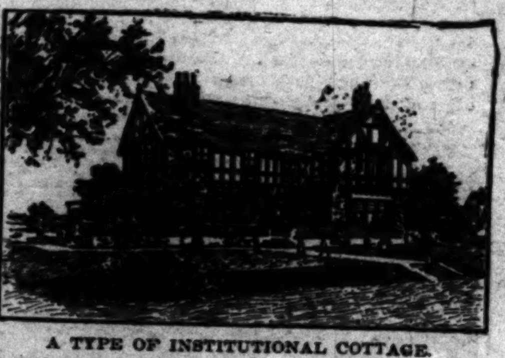
NEW YORK, May 2.—There is growing up on the banks of the Hudson, in the northern end of this city, one of the most remarkable and interesting groups of buildings in the world, the future home of the New York Juvenile Asylum. When it is completed it will form an institutional community such as is to be found nowhere else here or abroad, and not only will put the United States to the fore in the handling of sociological problems, in which Germany has held prëeminence until now, but will, it is intended, set the standard for all kinds of institutional work the world over.

There are to be sixty-five separate buildings in the Juvenile Asylum's little village, sheltering a thousand boys and girls from New York's streets. Fifty of them are cottages, each with accommodations for twenty children; the others include every feature of a model modern town, except, of course, the shops. The full realization of the plans may not come for years, for it was required of the architects, York and Sawyer of this city, that the institution should be so laid out as to permit of indefinite expansion in building. But enough of the necessary structures are already nearly completed to assure the asylum moving in the late summer from the home on Washington Heights it has occupied for half a century to the new home at Echo Hills near Dobb's Ferry.

This relocation would have been necessitated soon by the growth of the city even had not the management found the time right for such an expansion of institutional methods as never before has been attempted. When the Juvenile Asylum was opened, fifty years ago, Washington Heights was far out in the open countryside, but year by year the city crept nearer until its great tide laps about the yards and buildings of the three blocks the refuge occupies. It is to get them away from the influences of the city streets, to protect them against the ills of overcrowded living and indiscriminate association, that boys and girls are intrusted to the asylum's sheltering walls. The scheme of the management's undertaking to this end was so important in its breadth and so unusual in detail that the most expert practical advice was required, and when, after a competition which engaged many of the leading architectural firms in the country, York and Sawyer were commissioned, their instructions looked as much toward overcoming the evil social influences of the metropolis on its young as toward the mere housing of eight hundred or a thousand children.

So the community at Echo Hills will be an object lesson in what may be called sociological architecture. The boys and girls who leave the asylum will take with them into the outer world an inbred desire for good and beautiful surroundings; the generous grounds have been laid out and the various buildings designed with this particularly in view. Simplicity, cleanliness and high ideals they will instinctively encourage wherever they may go, and if, as happened in not a few instances, some of them take high positions in their later lives and have opportunities to influence others directly or indirectly, the psychological effect the asylum management seeks may appear in innumerable communities.

One of the features adopted as basic to the general purposes of the scheme is the so-called cottage plan. Instead of the old-fashioned barracks, divided into sections, wings or wards, such as most institutions still employ, the living accommodations of the Juvenile Asylum's new establishment will consist in small detached houses, each with rooms for twenty children and each in charge of a "cottage father" or "cottage mother." The cottages, which architecturally are a modification of the Queen Anne type, are divided into two classes, those with separate rooms where living will be not very different from what it is in any good American home, and those with the dormitory system, much like the arrangement of a large high-class boarding-school. Each house of the former kind has on the lower floor a "living-room," kitchen, dining-room, large hall and several closets, while the upper part is divided into twenty private rooms, generous quarters for the house superintendent and a bathroom. Residence here is to be regarded as a special honor, the boy or girl who occupies an individual room being intrusted with its care as a recognition of good conduct and general neatness. Nothing will suggest to a child the idea of restraint or of institutional life in the worse sense; the atmosphere at Echo Hills is to be that of a home, and not of a place of commitment.



A TYPE OF INSTITUTIONAL COTTAGE.
One of the Dormitory Buildings of the New York Juvenile Asylum's new Community.

With what may be called the intimate home life of their young charges thus carefully provided for, the asylum authorities have been no less far-sighted in the outside surroundings of daily life. Given a little valley and a gently rolling hillside, the architects placed the quasi public features of the community in the positions of command. Down the middle of the big rectangular grounds, which cover eighty acres, are long open stretches—a common, a parade ground, a large athletic field with a building containing a swimming pool and baths; even a tiny lake and an ornate fountain. At one end stands the church, while clustered about the other are the cottages; an administration building, two very large schoolhouses and quarters for the industrial departments—for the young folks of the asylum make many of their own necessities—are ranged along the sides. The girls' houses are by themselves on the eastern slope of the valley and the highest eminence, to the westward, is occupied by a hospital of the most complete modern equipment.

Perhaps the most interesting member of the whole group is the central kitchen building in which all the food for everybody at the institution is to be prepared. It is isolated at one side of the grounds and will be fitted up in a way to make the most exacting hotel chef green with envy. To distribute the meals among the various cottages an automobile will be employed, the portion for each house being put in a "hot box" by itself and kept warm by the machine's hot-water tanks. In this way the advantages of a central kitchen for catering on a large scale are combined with those of the cottage dining-rooms for the individual "boarders."

The architects have given full importance to the landscape features of their work which are expected to count for so much in the sociological aspect of the plans. All roadways are kept at the back of the buildings so far as possible and only footpaths cut the green before them. To the bit of water which nature set at their disposal the designers have added several artificial ponds, trees and shrubbery have been set out or rearranged as best suits the broad outlook, and when the grounds are finished they will be as carefully perfected in their "naturalness" as any private park in the world.

In its fifty years of life the New York Juvenile Asylum has given shelter to 36,000 children, and, its usefulness is constantly increasing. Its charges come, for the most part, from the city's densely settled districts, in some of which less than 25 per cent. of the population is native-born. In this great, new land many a humble family, unable to speak a word of English, unfamiliar with the ways of a strange country and people, finds life a too bitter struggle, and among the inmates of the asylum are a great many little ones "surrendered" by parents unable to provide them with food and clothing.

Over the Andes. By Frederic J. Haskin.

SANTIAGO TO MENDOZA.

A PERILOUS, UNCOMFORTABLE, BUT GLORIOUS JOURNEY.

From a Special Correspondent.

MENDOZA (Argentina) April, 1904.—When the summit of the Andes was finally reached, after the long climb by train, coach and muleback, and the glories of this wonderful range were in full view, the appropriateness of what the cowboy said when he first saw the mountains came forcibly to mind. The rough fellow was a man of deep feeling, but of few words. As his eyes took in the spectacle, and its grandeur grew upon him, his spirit of appreciation arose, until, no longer able to contain himself, he flung his wide-brimmed hat high in the air and enthusiastically shouted: "Hurrah for God!" This tribute of the honest plainsman, although very brief and simple, is more eloquent with feeling than whole chapters of description.

The Andes have no trees upon them at this point, and the members of a party were discussing the probable cause of the absence of life of this kind. The small daughter of a gentleman in the crowd offered a solution of the problem by suggesting that "maybe God forgot them." Afterward she wondered if He was sorry when He found it out.

Glorious Southern Sunrise.

The first night going from Santiago to Argentina, the traveler over the Andes sleeps in a corrugated iron shed so high up the trail that he does not need any ice for his tea. To say that he sleeps here the first night is misleading—he only stays a few hours. It hardly seems he has had time to warm his blankets before the guides are after him. The start is made in the dark, and at a pace that is thrilling. As his mule gallops wildly around the edges of dizzy precipices he shudders from other causes than the cold. But the sunrise is his recompense. It all happens as quickly as the opening of a jack-in-the-box. Long, slender arms of light reach up and tear the robe of night into shreds; the summits flash white; the mist rolls out of the cañons; and there, in all their miles of splendor—downward, upward, and outward—stand the mountains in unveiled glory, with the sun scrambling hastily over their crest, then soaring into the sky. The whole thing is over in an instant. No mechanism could move so swiftly, so noiselessly, and so effectively. Surely the works of the Creator are a praise to His name.

"The Breeding Place of Sighs."

Rescue House in the Andes

As soon as the traveler has time to rub the sleep from his surprised eyes, he finds a most amazing view spread out before him. High overhead the trail winds into the clouds, while below it wiggles away in twenty huge serpentine coils. The craft of no painter on earth could reproduce the dazzling effects. Hung on the gray of the slopes are slender ribbons of melted snow, which disappear in gauze-like clouds of mist as delicate and vapory as the mesh of a bridal veil; the distant peaks shrouded with their blue cloaks of haze, are fearful in their rugged, towering grandeur; out of the cañons strong winds blow and strange sounds arise. Man with all his craft and cunning can do no such thing as this, and awe lays its finger on you as you feel your meagerness and littleness. How scant and empty is mortal effort when matched with the work of the Almighty! That He is the master builder none can deny.

The Haunt of Nature.

After the hasty scramble over the frost and snow of the summit, comes the hair-raising descent. The guides tell you that the mules never fall, but how they can keep their feet at such a pace seems a miracle. Down! Down! Down! The summits sway in the white light above and the cañons yawn below. As the mules gallop around the projecting shoulder of a frowning cliff, running perilously near the precipice, there is a thunderous roar in a neighboring chasm as a mass of rock breaks away and crashes into space. One doesn't know whether to laugh or to pray. There is a feeling of great exhilaration mingled with a sense of fear. No matter what happens, it will not be surprising. The upward rush of air feels like the breath of an invisible presence. In a moment the mountain may speak and challenge you for daring to trespass on its domain. And it would be the voice of ages—of countless ages. These immutable shapes saw the world begin, and have looked with unblinking eyes on the march of all time. What secrets do they not know? Is this not the trysting place of the elements? From here the storm king sends his riders north to harass and destroy; here is where the night broods and tells its troubles to the wind; it is the breeding place of sighs.

The train makes an all-day job of getting down to sea level. It is a sort of processional. The track hugs the bank of the little river, and the mountains march by in unbroken columns. Miles of temples and pyramids and amphitheaters stalk to the rear as the open cars wriggle along the channel. The endless array of towering rock is circled above by drifting clouds, and encompassed below by swirling sand. The eyes hurt from the white light and the throat burns from the intense heat. The dust becomes a plague. The train stops at a forlorn little station, and as the gasping, panting engine is allowed to quench its thirst from the nozzle of a water tank, you nod in your seat. You think the car is running through a tunnel in a mountain of ice cream and you have no spoon! What a predicament! Then there is a jerk and you "come to" with a start.

A Desert Passing.

As the train moves slowly onward, the station agent stands on the platform looking after it. His skin is as brown as the leather mail pouch at his feet, and his eyes squint under their dark lashes. You are soon nodding again. You dream of the fellow you once met in the desert when your water can was empty. You recall that he did not speak, but held up his empty, rattling can; that you held up yours, and passed on in silence, so disappointed that you could have cried. Army and Navy Women.

DUTIES AND PRIVILEGES OF WIVES AND DAUGHTERS OF OFFICERS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE army wife recently filed a very emphatic protest with the War Department at Washington. The burden of her plaint is that the plums of the service, in the form of assignments to act as military instructors at private academies and colleges in the United States, are all being bestowed upon retired officers who already enjoy the boon of homes of their own, while the younger men who are on the active list get never a chance at these positions so desirable from a social standpoint, but are detailed to isolated posts in the West, in Alaska, and the Philippines, where their wives and daughters have few advantages.

The social life of the army and navy is an always interesting subject, because it is so full of contrasts and so radically different from every other sphere of similar activity. It is only occasionally that the general public has forced upon it evidence that there are shades as well as lights in this attractive existence. As it is, the evidence contained in this petition to the Secretary of War that all is not sunshine in the life of the army wife, will soon be forgotten by that very large portion of the feminine public which is fascinated by the most spectacular branch of official life.

The social careers of most of the women of the army and navy may be said to begin at West Point or Annapolis, for it is at the Military Academy or the Naval Academy that the curtain is rung up on most of the pretty little romances which culminate in service weddings with an abundance of pomp and gold lace. The winter is the season of the greatest social activity at Annapolis, while at West Point the summer is the playtime looked forward to with the greatest anticipation by the cadets. At the Naval Academy the great events of the winter are the "hops" which are held at frequent intervals, and to which flock girls from all parts of the country. The midshipman who is heart-whole and fancy-free is provided with strong incentive to surrender to Cupid by the belles who are invited to the old town on Chesapeake Bay as the guests of the wives of the officers stationed there as instructors, and on the other hand the future ensign who has already decided that there is only one girl for him is a poor diplomat if he cannot obtain for her an invitation to be the guest of some obliging matron, who, like all the world, loves a lover.

At West Point the announcement that tents will be pitched, into which the embryo officers will move from their winter quarters in the big barracks, is the signal for the inauguration of a series of hops and other social festivities that continue without abatement until camp is broken on August 28. Every day during the vacation season, too, dress parade brings out many pretty spectators in muslins, and there are an exceptional number of strollers in the famous Flirtation Walk.

Any person who has watched the cadets and midshipmen at Uncle Sam's famous schools for fighters can appreciate that it is not solely the gold lace which wins Cupid's battle. The future defenders of the flag—each a man picked from many solely on merit—are trained not only in every manly virtue, but in every social grace, and they are such adepts in bestowing every social attention that it is surprising that even the most stony-hearted girl can remain unmoved by such devotion. Just as an illustration of the manner in which these young disciples of Mars do things, it might be cited that the girl who has been invited to a dance at West Point or Annapolis, a perfect stranger to every participant save her escort, finds her dance card filled ere she enters the ballroom.

The navy bride has, under present conditions, a kindlier fate than her sister of the army, for it is customary to assure a young naval or marine corps officer who marries at least one year's "shore duty" as a honeymoon, but since Uncle Sam became a world power the young army officer is more likely than not to have as his wedding tour a compulsory journey to some remote military post in the Philippines. The army women as a class, it may be remarked, are anything but friendly to "expansion." The older ones are victims of the Louisiana Purchase, which brought them weary years of life on the alkali plains of the West, and now the younger ones are being, to use the feminine expression, "buried" in the Philippines, with a long, wearisome voyage on a transport as a prelude.

However, the monotonous garrison life has some compensations, particularly if the women who make up the social life of the post are reasonably congenial. "Reasonably" is the word to use in this connection, for anything more than moderation in such relationships would be too much to expect. There is probably more jealousy in the army and navy than in any other branch of our population, unless it be, mayhap, the theatrical profession, and since the isolated army post is very much like a small town where every person knows everybody else, and a large share of his neighbor's domestic and business affairs, it goes without saying that the soil is fertile for personal clashes of one sort or another.

On the other hand, the families on such an oasis in the wilderness are largely dependent upon each other for diversions, and the women grow marvelously resourceful in devising varied amusements within such limitations. The girl who pays a visit to one of these isolated army posts where there are a number of young officers, enjoys a homage calculated to turn the head of the most sensible of Miss Columbia's daughters, but the young bride who gains her first experience of army life in such environment is likely to find need for much patience, infinite social diplomacy, and not a little philosophy, and even this equipment may not save her from a few heartburnings.

In the navy the only women who enjoy social life under conditions that correspond to those in the army are those whose husbands or fathers are stationed at navy yards or naval stations. Such environment usually betokens conditions as nearly ideal as may be, for the navy yards are, almost without exception, located in or near large cities, and thus the coterie of navy women have not only their own immediate circle, but also the larger activities of the urban community at hand. In both army and navy service social life reaches the acme of perfection in development at the national capital, where there are constantly on duty enough officers of each service to make a community of their own, to say nothing of the numerous retired officers who make their homes in Washington.

In the whole range of our military and naval life perhaps the women most to be pitied are those navy wives whose husbands are on sea duty. Under such circumstances the wife is doomed to months or even years of separation with the only alternative the following of her husband's ship from port to port. Inasmuch as it is against the regulations for any woman to travel on a cruising war vessel in regular service the navy wife is under the necessity of following on a passenger steamer which, of course, involves considerable expense. Arrived at the port where the American fleet is at anchor the wife may visit her husband on his ship during the day, but she must go ashore each night, often braving the uncertainties of second or third-rate boarding-houses in order to obtain quarters near the water front. Even this life has its compensations, however, for on the days when a navy officer can obtain shore leave he and his wife can spend hours in sightseeing and in prowling among the quaint shops and bazaars, and not infrequently there are unexpected little social triumphs in opportunities to be presented informally to royalty, or to enjoy hospitalities at palaces well worthy of a visit.

ODD COURTSHIPS.

Among the Yao Midos, one of the many Burmese-Tartar people, the young men woo their wives absolutely without words, but to the sound of music. On the first day of winter they have a great feast, at which all the marriageable girls gather and listen to the music made by the bachelors, who sit under the "desire tree," each playing his favorite instrument.

As the maiden he loves passes him the youth plays louder and more feelingly. If the girl ignores him and passes on, he knows that she will have none of him; if she steps up to him and lays a flower upon the instrument he jumps up, grasps her by the hand, taking care not to drop the flower, and they go away together.

When a Dyak of Borneo makes love he helps the girl in the hardest portion of her daily toil. If she smiles upon him, no matter how sweetly, he does not immediately respond, but waits until the next dark night. Then he steals to her house and wakens her as she lies asleep beside her parents.

The parents, if they approve, make no signs, but sleep on—or pretend to. If the girl accepts she rises and takes from her lover the betel and sweetmeats he has bought her. That seals their betrothal and he departs as he came, neither speaking nor being spoken to.—[Chicago News.

MORO DOES EVERYTHING LEFT-HANDED.

To judge Moros by inflexible Occidental standards of motives and morals is to lose at once the key to the situation. The very structure of their language differentiates them from ourselves. Verbs are in the passive voice. The man who was slashed and killed provoked the trouble. The under dog in the fight is always the aggressor. The thief is not blamed for "finding" things lying about at loose ends; the man who lost the property is the real criminal—besides, he is a fool. If he were a sensible man he would have exercised vigilance against the approach of the thief. Moros reverse everything. Like all Orientals, they venerate the past and their folklore, myths and legends abound in tales not unlike those of the Arabian Nights entertainment.

They turn to the left of the road, extend the left hand naturally in greeting, and the scribes write from right to left, turning the paper sidewise, as any left-handed man would do.—[Journal of Military Service Institution.

COUNTS AS COOKS.

There is a chefs' and waiters' club about a block from the Waldorf in New York city, and whenever the weather is fine the members may be seen standing out on the curb. The other day a couple of knowing New Yorkers passed on the other side of the street and one of them, in a mood for fun, stopped and suddenly called out: "Hello, Count!" Then he bowed at the crowd on the curb. About six men in the group made a graceful acknowledgment. You are always sure to find a few noblemen in these groups, and they are the real thing. It would even be safe to try for a Duke at this little chefs' club. There is a mistaken impression that all the nobles who come to this side are in search of fortunes through the easy path of matrimony. This impression probably arises from the fact that one rarely hears of them except in a sensational connection. The honest, hard-working nobleman usually tries to hide his title when he takes to menial tasks.—[Kansas City Journal.

DISAPPOINTED IN LOVE.

After living thirty years in a cellar, accompanied only by her dogs and cats, a woman of eighty-nine died in Vienna last week.

The daughter of a distinguished officer who served against Napoleon, and grand-daughter of an Austrian court official, she was unfortunate in a love affair and withdrew from the world forever.

With the exception of the woman who brought her food, the recluse saw no one, and her sole means of existence was a small sum of money sent her monthly by the lawyer of a prince, whose identity has not been disclosed.—[London Daily Mail.

ENTIRE SYSTEM REVOLUTIONIZED ON SCIENTIFIC LINES.

SOLDIER TO BE GIVEN PSYCHOLOGICAL TRAINING IN ESTIMATING DISTANCE—TO BE TAUGHT ALSO APPEARANCE OF HUMAN FIGURE AT VARIOUS DISTANCES—FACTS OF VALUE TO GOLF PLAYER AND PHOTOGRAPHER—OPTICAL DELUSIONS WHICH HAVE FOOLED MARKSMEN.

From a Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Our army is completely revolutionizing its system of rifle practice, a brand-new course of instruction for sharpshooters is being prepared and new targets are being devised for the ranges These innovations are being based upon scientific experiments whose results will be of the utmost interest to the civilian nimrod. Maj. John F. Guilfoyle, Assistant Adjutant-General, U. S. A., well known as a crack shot and athlete, has been placed in charge of the whole matter of small arms practice, and every means is to be taken not only to hold the American soldier to his present standing as the best rifle shot in the world, but to win for him a record with the pistol and carbine.

Training Eye to Judge Distance.

The training of the eye to an acute judgment of distance will be one of the interesting features of this instruction. The uneducated eye falls painfully short in this respect, as every golf player, every photographer and every sportsman has learned to his embarrassment. Hitherto there has seemed to be no systematic training for this defect, although psychologists have lately theorized upon its probable causes. The army has considered every means toward a cure and, as might be expected, the simpiest methods have proven most effective. Not only the soldier, then, but the man with the mid-iron, or driver, the man with the kodak or the amateur shot may educate himself by practicing this simple training.

Two posts 100 yards apart, with short stakes between to mark twenty-five-yard intervals, are to be placed near each barracks. The soldier will be required to pace off this marked distance several times each day, counting his steps. He will thus not only learn how many of his steps cover 100 yards, but will become familiar with the appearance of the entire distance and its fractional parts. Next, a mark, distant more or less than 100 yards, will be shown him, and he will be required to compare it with the 100-yard unit and record his estimate. Later, he will verify his figures by pacing the unknown stretch. The stake will be changed from time to time, and as he grows proficient he will verify his estimates only as they become unusually inaccurate.

How Man Looks at Various Distances.

As the result of no end of experiments the following facts have been gathered as items in this distance training:

At thirty yards the white of a man's eyes is still plainly visible. Up to eighty yards the eyes themselves continue distinctly visible. At 100 yards all parts of the body are seen; slight movements are perceptible and the minute details of the uniform can be distinguished. At 200 yards the outlines of the face become confused, and rows of brass buttons look like stripes. At 400 yards the face is a mere dot, but all movements of the face and arms are still distinct. At 600 yards details of an individual human form can no longer be distinguished, although the files of a squad of men can be counted if the light be strong. At 800 yards the men in such a group cannot always be counted, nor can their individual movements be distinguished. At 1000 yards a line of men resembles a broad belt; the direction of their movement can, however, be determined. At 1200 yards men afoot can be distinguished from men on horseback. At 2000 yards a mounted man will usually appear as a mere speck or spot.

Having digested these facts, the soldier will be posted in the field, while men detailed as markers are sent to various distances and placed in different positions, while he is questioned as to how far away they are and just why he thinks so. Similarly the golf player driving to a point where the face outlines of another player are becoming confused can learn to estimate that he has not whizzed the gutta percha sphere more than 200 yards from him. If the faces of the players on the putting green before him appear as mere dots he can estimate that the next hole is about 400 yards away.

Solving Optical Illusions.

Some optical illusions and delusions also figure in this interesting training. The soldier will be taught that objects seem nearer when in a bright light, when different in color from the background, when viewed over water, snow or any other uniform surface without intervening objects, such as a wheat field, or in the clear atmosphere of high altitudes. He will learn also that objects seem more distant than otherwise when he is looking over a depression in the ground, when a poor light or fog intervenes, when only a small part of the object can be seen, or when the eye is looking from low toward higher ground.

Estimation of distance by sound will also enter into the course. It will be explained that sound travels at the rate of about 1100 feet, or 366 yards, per second. A distant gun being fired, the soldier will be taught to count the number of seconds, or parts of seconds, between flash and report. Multiplying these by 366 he will get, approximately, the distance of the gun in yards. This method will of course be of great assistance on a battlefield, where it will correct the estimate of distance to a hostile battery. Proficiency in estimating distance is, of course, necessary in any class of firing. Under the new regulations failure to attain a certain average in this respect will lower a soldier's shooting qualification one grade. Thus a man having previously qualified as a sharpshooter, but who later falls below the proficiency in distance discrimination prescribed for his class, must be rated as a mere marksman in the annual report of his post.

That meteorological conditions have a great effect upon accuracy of fire has been proven by other experiments. Inaccurate shooting is noted especially on bright, hot days, when local currents, produced by the differently heated ground, cause unaccountable deflections. When portions of the range are therefore cooler, the adjacent air being ity will offer increased resistance to racy of shooting will result. When the curate practice is that offered when the Limits of Accurate Fire.

Changes in Targets.

There is to be a return to the old-target. In 1898 this was abolished, but new type will be round, whereas that under uniform meteorological conditions

The "collective-fire target" consists [illegible] of the human figure. Nearest the shooter are [illegible] lying figures in line, and ten yards behind these are sixteen of the kneeling silhouettes. Twenty yards back of the latter are the same number of standing figures. All forty-eight represent men in the firing position.

Disappearing Silhouette Targets.

"Disappearing targets" are also to be used. These are silhouettes representing soldiers in the kneeling and standing positions, each placed in the middle of a rectangular target. At a signal they are exposed to view and are then withdrawn after a prescribed number of seconds.

The new recruit will be taught to aim by first resting his piece upon a loosely filled sand bag supported in the upper fork of a tripod. Each company will be equipped with four or five of these contrivances.

For pistol practice black pasters or discs are to be placed upon the barracks walls and squads of soldiers with unloaded revolvers will go through the motions of aiming and firing at these until they correct false positions.

Later will come practice with loaded pistols. A more advanced course will be given when the men are mounted. Previous to this their horses will be put through a preliminary training to accustom them to pistol reports. Blank cartridges will be fired near them each day while they are being groomed on the picket line and all forms of targets will be shown to them until they cease to shy at such sounds and sights. The mounted men will be drilled in rapid aim while their horses are in motion. They will be taught to fire at silhouette targets arranged about the riding tracks. A course in pistol practice, still more advanced, will comprise shooting at swinging discs of leather five inches in diameter so suspended near the riding track that they may be kept in motion by the blasts of the pistols.

Capt. Harry C. Hale, General Staff, has posed for a series of photographs illustrating correct firing positions with both rifle and pistol. These will be published in one of the compact little volumes of revised "Fi[illegible] for Small Arms," to be distributed among the troops this summer. By courtesy of the War Department the writer is permitted to publish them herewith, that they may illustrate correct methods to national guardsmen as well as amateur rifle and pistol shots.

Lighting of Ranges.

For each post a shooting gallery fifty-five or sixty feet long is to be prescribed. Each is to be so arranged that there will be a strong light upon the target. The light at the firing point will be overhead, from the rear or from both sides, but never from one side only, as this arrangement has been found to brighten only one side of the front sight and cause inaccuracies hitherto unexplained. Experiments have proven that windows between the firing point and target give cross lights and shadows which interfere with accuracy. The range of the galleries will be fifty feet, at which distance the marks made by bullets may be discerned.

[illegible] Trophy Matches.

[illegible] will encourage our fighting men to enter the several military rifle matches, both international and national, which are now participated in each year. The "Palma Trophy," which represents the military team championship of the world, will be contested for this year at Sea Girt, N. J., on or about September 1. This was won by the American team at Bisley, England, last year. It was created in 1876, at the time of the Philadelphia Centennial, to be shot for in international competition by riflemen of the world. It may be contested for by teams of eight men from any country, with any rifle. It has been won by the American teams at each competition except that of 1902, when it went to Canada. It has never crossed the Atlantic.

The National Match—the next greatest event—will be held this year at Ft. Riley, Kan., during the latter part of August. It will be open to teams from the regular army, cavalry, infantry, navy, marine corps and State and Territorial National Guards. The team making the highest aggregate total will receive the national trophy, a beautiful bronze tablet, representing Mars holding in leash the dogs of war. This sculpture cost $1000, and was authorized by Congress. It was won last summer for the first time by the New York National Guard team, Lieut. [illegible] Casey of that team winning the individual championship.

A STORM AT SEA.

I [illegible] myself with the fore-crosstrees, some seventy feet above the deck. As I searched the vacant stretch of water before me, I comprehended thoroughly the need for haste if we were to recover any of our men. As I gazed at the heavy sea through which we were running, I doubted that there was a boat afloat. It did not seem possible that so frail a craft could survive such stress of wind and water.

I could not feel the full force of the wind, for we were running with it, but from my lofty perch I looked down as though outside the Ghost and apart from her, and saw the shape of her outlined sharply against the foaming sea as she tore along instinct with life. Sometimes she would lift and send across some great wave, burying her starboard rail from view and covering her deck to the hatches with the boiling ocean. At such moments, starting from a windward roll, I would go flying through the air with dizzying swiftness, as though I clung to the end of a huge, inverted pendulum, the arc of which, between the greater rolls, must have been seventy feet or more. Once the terror of this giddy sweep overpowered me, and for a while I clung on, hand and foot, weak and trembling, unable to search the sea for the missing boats or to behold aught of the sea but that which roared beneath and strove to overwhelm the Ghost.—[Jack London, in the May Century.

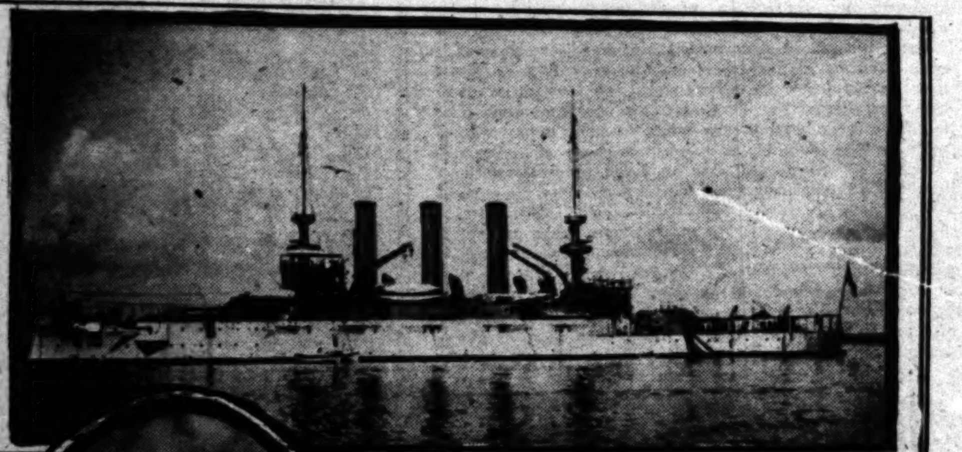
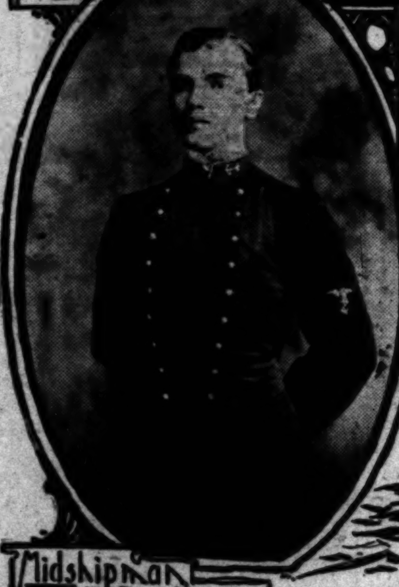
SAD ENDING OF A ROMANCE BY THE MISSOURI EXPLOSION.

By a Special Contributor.

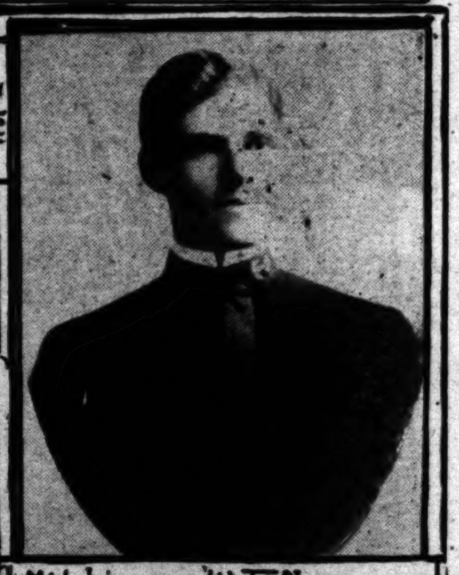
ONE of the most pathetic incidents of the recent Missouri disaster was the killing, as they probably stood side by side, of Midshipmen Thomas Ward, Jr., and W. E. T. Neumann, the explosion at the same time ending a sad romance, as the brave Neumann had some time previously met and fallen in love with his friend's sister, who had promised to become his wife shortly before he was suddenly stricken in the terrible disaster. The devoted friendship of these two sailors was of a most unusual nature in these matter-of-fact times and continually reminded their friends of the ancient story of Damon and Pythias.



The Missouri Two Days Before the Accident



Midshipman Thomas Ward Jr.



Midshipman W. T. Neumann

They had attracted attention not only on the Missouri, but throughout the United States Navy. To the Secretary of the Navy himself their devotion was not unknown. Indeed, there was that manliness about it that appealed to all observers.

The two young men entered the Naval Academy the same year, Ward a few months before Neumann, and all during their course at Annapolis were inseparable. They shared each other's joys and sorrows and were close as brothers. They both completed their four years' course at the academy in 1903, but months before this time came they had been planning to obtain, if possible, assignments to the same ship.

Through the influence of superior officers who had noted and admired the frank and manly devotion the two young men had for each other, this long cherished wish was realized, and they were both assigned to the Missouri, Ward on February 21 and Neumann on February 28, 1903.

As a natural consequence of the close relations of the two sailors, Midshipman Neumann was introduced and finally fell in love with Miss Ward, as handsome and ardent a sweetheart as ever a brave sailor lad dared to claim when in port and to dream of and toast when at sea.

The engagement of Neumann and Miss Ward naturally brought the two men closer than ever before, and their devoted friendship during their service on the Missouri was more marked even than during their years at the academy.

Ward was the son of Gen. Ward of Oswego, N. Y., and through the former's request the Navy Department sent the body of Midshipman Neumann to Oswego together with that of young Ward, both bodies, at the conclusion of the funeral ceremonies, being interred side by side in the Naval Cemetery at Annapolis.

These two brave midshipmen, although occupying the lowest commissioned rank, were heroes whose fame should be celebrated in the brightest annals of the American navy. When the awful explosion occurred on the battleship Missouri, the door of the powder magazine was open and the blaze of the explosion threatened to ignite the entire store of the ship's ammenition, to the utter destruction of the vessel and every man aboard.

These two devoted friends did not shirk their duties during the awful moments which ensued. Close in all their doings and undertakings, both on land and on sea, they could not be separated now in the impending danger, and bravely and courageously they died together.

How sad the ending of the romance between the dead midshipman and his sweetheart on land, who had promised to be his bride! The latter not only loses her dear brother sailor, who was instrumental in bringing about her romantic love affair, but also the idol of her heart, whom she had loved almost to distraction and upon whom she had built all her future hopes and happiness, trusting in the very near future to be able to attain the realization of her hopes in being lawfully able to call her loved by the endearing name of "husband."

When last they met, plans were discussed between Midshipman Neumann and Miss Ward for their anticipated coming wedding, in which nuptial affair Midshipman Ward was to figure as the "best man." The affair engrossed all their attention and time at their command, and no three individuals ever experienced more real happiness over a similar contemplated event. The sailor loved his sweetheart dearly, and the love was reciprocated. This happy state of things more than pleased Midshipman Ward, as the latter knew that his bosom sailor friend would one day conclude to ask the hand of his sister in marriage, and they would all thus be more strongly and affectionately united.

A GLADSTONE ANECDOTE.

The sarcastic cheer is very common, and I recall one fatal example of its use. Mr. Gladstone was once drawing very remarkable conclusions from some figures—an art in which he was an unapproached master. A member on the other side laughed out a "Hear, hear," ironically. Gladstone stopped instantly, and turned and looked with interest at the interrupter, who assuredly would at that moment have given a good deal to recall his words. Then he turned back to the Speaker. "Sir," he said, "the honorable gentleman laughs." For a minute or two he quoted from memory a long string of figures proving the accuracy of what he had previously said. "The next time the honorable member laughs," he continued in honeyed tones, "I would advise him—I would venture to counsel him—to ornament his laugh—to decorate it—with an idea."—[Henry Norman, in the Century.

New York, as a pending trial reminds us, is the most cosmopolitan city in the world. A Greek driver for a Chinese firm is accused of running over an Italian boy; he was arrested by an Irish policeman; the boy was attended by a German doctor, and a Hebrew Coroner held the inquest. Now a French and a Polish lawyer are discussing before a Scotch judge and an American jury whether the firm shall pay damages.—[Town Topics.

MEXICO, May 2.—Centuries agone, when the Valley of Mexico was one vast lake, to whose quiet edges descended the gigantic forests of oak and cypress, the hill of Tepeyac rose isolated from the northern water edge. It was a Mexican classic, as was the ancient Mount of Mars in Athens. Upon its flinty forehead the first inhabitants of the Valley of Mexico erected a strange temple of lava rock and gray limestone. It was the temple of Teonantezin, the Mexican Goddess of Earth and Grain, a mild deity who rejected human victims and was propitiated by sacrifices of turtle doves, swallows and pigeons. She was the protectress of the Totonoqui Indians. For centuries the bloodless rites of this Mexican Ceres were celebrated, until the sanguinary worship of Huitzilopochtli, the Aztec god of war, dominated the empire of 30,000,000 souls and lifted its rose-red teocalli on every Mexican hilltop, where human sacrifices replaced the more peaceful offices of the past.

Later the hill of Tepeyac was named by the Spanish conquistadores "Guadalupe." In the year 1531, on the night of December 15, according to the Mexican tradition, the Virgin Mary appeared for the third time to an Aztec farm hand by the name of Juan Diego, who, with his wife Lucia Maria, lived in the town of Santiago Tlaltelolco. Diego was in the habit of crossing the Guadalupe hill to hear mass, for he was one of the early converts to Christianity, and on the occasion of his first walk to church, on the 9th of December, he heard the singing of angels, but paid no attention to it at the time. On the 15th of the month he heard for the third time the suggestive song, and looking about saw the Virgin, who instructed him to have a church built upon the hill of Guadalupe, at the point where she then stood. The Indian convert represented the facts to Bishop Juan Zumarraga, who was the first Catholic bishop of Mexico, and who is known in history as the iconoclast who destroyed the Mexican manuscripts and picture writings.

Convinced of the sincerity of Diego, who showed him the pictured flowers on his tilma, the work of the Virgin, the archbishop built a church at Guadalupe. By papal bull of May 25, 1754, the festival of Guadalupe was instituted, and she became the patrnoess and protectress of new Spain. The Virgin of Guadalupe was thereafter the patroness of the colonists in their war against the mother country, while the Virgin of Remedios, whose shrine is in the hills to the west of this city, was the patroness of the Royalists, or Spanish Tories. When Hidalgo, the father of Mexican independence, pronounced at midnight of September 15, 1810, against Spanish rule, he took for his war standard a flag upon which was the impress of the Virgin of Guadalupe, and until the wars of reform, culminating in 1857 in divorce of church and state obtained, the President of the Mexican republic was wont on the National Independence Day to include in his salutation to the people the words "Long live the Virgin of Guadalupe."

It is many years since Hidalgo, betrayed by overconfidence to a cruel death, passed away, but his rugged and rough old flag holds a cherished corner in the National Museum. It is many years since the Presidents of this republic have included in their midnight "Grito" the salutation to the Virgin of Guadalupe, but her name and her picturesque legend live in the hearts of Mexicans by the millions, and on the occasion of Guadalupe Day (December 12) the brown hills surrounding her shrine are crowned with Indians, sometimes 100,000, from different parts of the republic, who meet to celebrate the incident that has been printed upon their consciousness through legendary lore.

On November 27, 1824, by governmental decree, the 12th of December was declared a national holiday, although since the promulgation by Benito Juarez of the laws of reform, 1857, the government has no participation, direct or indirect, with the festivities of Guadalupe. The governmental decree of 1824 had been anticipated by another decree dated February 20, 1822, establishing the Order of Guadalupe. Among the choice paintings in the National Museum of Belles Artes, the Academy of San Carlos, in this city, is a small oil painting representing the ceremony held on November 12, 1853, in the Collegiate Sanctuary of Guadalupe, for the reëstablishment of the order incorporated in 1822. The decree of reëstablishment was signed by Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Ana, general of division, Knight of the Grand Cross of the Royal Spanish Order of Charles III, and President of the Mexican republic. This decree was published in the "Diario Official," or government organ, of November 14. It set forth the necessity of remembering the glorious epoch of the Revolutionary War, made successful of the Virgin of Guadalupe. President Santa Ana was by the heroism of the colonists and the active protection proclaimed grand master of the Order of Guadalupe. The ceremony of inauguration and reëstablishment was attended by the President, the Diplomatic Corps, including the American Minister, the troops of the garrison, and the highest people in society. The painting in the Academy represents Gen. Santa Ana, grand master, handing to the candidates for knighthood their parchments.

The Order of Guadalupe, therefore, covered two different epochs in Mexican history: the period of the First empire, under Iturbide, and the dictatorial period under Santa Ana, and later on the order was signalized and solemnized under the Second Empire under Archduke Maximilian. Emperor Iturbide designated among others as Knights of the Grand Cross, in addition to a number of the bishops of the country, Rev. Ramon Casasus, bishop of Guatemala; Rev. Nicolas Garcia, bishop of Nicaragua, as well as Anastasio Bustamante, one of the Presidents; Gen. Vicente Guerrero, the Revolutionary hero; Gen. Nicolas Bravo, also a hero of Mexican independence, and Gen. Lopez de Santa Ana. Santa Ana, who had managed to keep himself to the front, and followed Iturbide in power almost immediately, reciprocated the courtesy of Iturbide by designating Augustin Iturbide, Jr., as knight, and reaffirmed the title ended by death to Emperor Iturbide, Gen. Vicente Guerrero, Gen. Guadalupe Victoria, the first President of the covered in almost every religious story through time, and yet people believe the which they pin their faith. For ninety they finally built a more sumptuous most beautiful.

The interior of the church is well nigh magnificent high altar and tabernacle perhaps plastic from the very touch of the cording to the story) is a rough, coarse meshes, like the ordinary Mexican appears on this material without any background whatever, and shows on both sides the same. It represents no known style of art, and is unique, for no picture in the world has the same characteristics, so it is said. Four different kinds of "painting" are assembled in portions of the same rude unbleached canvas.

In addition, the gilding which appears in the stars embroidered in the garment, as well as the texture of the robe, appears to be woven rather than painted. Mexican faith has fastened on this tilma, or apron of Diego, the sign manual of the miraculous, for it is claimed that the painting or mysterious weaving was the instantaneous production of the "Mother of God." For years the cloth was exposed without any covering, not only to the smoke of the censors and candles, but to the damp air charged with saltpeter, and yet it seems as fresh and exquisite, aside from the rude cloth itself, as when it left the fingers of the Fairy Godmother of Mexico. For nearly 400 years this rough product of the maguey plant, which, according to natural laws, ought long since to have rotted away, is claimed to be in a perfect state of preservation.

The Church of Guadalupe, the most beautiful in the country and the holiest shrine, with its altar containing twenty-six tons of pure silver, its floor laid in diamond slabs of white and black Carrara marble, is necessarily a place treasured in the consciousness of the people. The Collegiate Church of Guadalupe should have been left alone in the original rich tetzontli of colonial times, for which has in modern times been substituted carved work in Chiluca stone, which is far less artistic and does violence to the historic in its architectural make-up, especially as the carvings are broken here and there by the interlacing streaks of cement. This tendency to deface the original stone facades of the old buildings is to be regretted, for there is but little left in the ancient architecture of colonial times to feast the artistic sense. The interior of the Coligiate Church, however, is fascinating. It has a magnificent general effect, with strong color and lavish gilding and decorations that are in absolute harmony. The artistic spirit is well pronounced. It is a domed basilica of purest type. The church architecture is charged with exquisite mysticism and symbolism too deep for word painting.

Many cathedrals are sermons in stone, implying a [illegible] religion, but the Guadalupe cathedral, or, rather, basilica, recalls the heroic architectural designs of Constantine the Great, who carried into Christendom the early designs of the Roman law courts. The basilica of Guadalupe has a resemblance to the structure of Saint [illegible] in the pinetta or pine woods of Ravenna. The paintings in the church are heroic, as well as historic, and one of the finest is the healing of the first Indian by the Virgin of Guadalupe. The picture shows an Aztec warrior with his throat pierced by an arrow, lying on the ground dying from his wound. The sacred procession bearing the altar of the Virgin passing by, stopped, and the priest prayed for the healing of the Indian. The story goes that in a little while he recovered completely; his wound was stanched and he stood up and bent his head to be baptized to the Catholic faith. There are thousands of cases of healing reported at the Guadalupe shrine, and all sorts of gifts have been donated to the church, in testimonial of gratitude, from the tiny silver charms and smaller gifts received in the church to the great stone sails that rise midway to the upper sanctuary. The latter were erected by a grateful sailor whose life, he claimed, had been saved by the Virgin of Guadalupe.

Adjoining the church at the foot of the hill is the [illegible] convent founded in 1780 and suppressed in 1862 under the Laws of Reform. Just beyond the little park [illegible] on the east of the church is the Chapel of the [illegible] in 1777 over the miraculous spring. The [illegible] covered with blue and yellow tiles, and the [illegible] is a curious architectural creation. The [illegible] includes the mineral spring of brackish [illegible] degrees Fahrenheit. The drinking of the [illegible] supposed to have healed many. Farther up the [illegible] Chapel of the Little Hill, built on the spot [illegible] sprang up at the Virgin's word for Juan [illegible] and take to the bishop in token of her [illegible]

The village of Guadalupe is historically famous for the treaty of peace made at Queretaro with the United States in [illegible] and ratified at Guadalupe.

Guadalupe is also noted for its native pottery, a species of hard baked and really artistic ware, manufactured by the Indians.

On the first day of May a solemn function was held in the church in honor of the Virgin and to commemorate the basilica privileges granted, as well as the 150th anniversary decreed by Pope Benedict XIV.

No mention of Guadalupe is complete without a mention of the crown of the Virgin, so magnificent that it is called by the Mexicans the "Imperial Diadem for [illegible]'s Queen."

This artistic creation was especially authorized by the [illegible] and the coronation was attended by the highest [illegible] of society. His Grace, Rev. Dr. Antonio Plan-[illegible] y Labastida, who was encharged by Archbishop [illegible] Antonio de Labastida y Davalos with the work [illegible] the sanctuary of Guadalupe, had received [illegible] designs from Mexican and foreign jewelers, [illegible] suited him, and he went to Paris and his idea [illegible] caught by Edhard Morgan, the famous jew-[illegible] Rue de la Paix 17. Mr. Morgan, who personally [illegible] the work of art, constructed the crown [illegible] gold, silver and jewels donated by Mexican ladies. [illegible] value of the gems has been estimated at $400,000, [illegible] the sum of $30,000 was paid to the Paris jeweler [illegible] handiwork. The crown weighs thirty Mexican [illegible]. It is 26 centimeters in height, the diadem or [illegible] measures 94 centimeters, while the widest part of [illegible], the dome, measures in circumference 1 meter [illegible] centimenters. It is all of silver heavily plated [illegible] the mouldings and medallions of the diadem, [illegible] the mould or body and those of the top, including the rose leaves, all of which are of gold and enamel. The diadem is formed of twenty-two medallions, upon which are rose leaves done in Limoges enamel, every leaf different, and under them in enameled letters the names of the twenty bishoprics existing at the time of the coronation (October 12, 1895.) Above the medallions are fifty stars formed of diamonds, and the medallions are linked with emeralds. The frames to the medallions, which are also enameled, are inlaid in gold. The diadem is also embellished with twenty-two angelic forms in relief, carved and enameled, alternating with stars and other symbolic adornments done in diamonds and other precious stones.

The mould, or body of the crown, resting upon the diadem, is formed of six shields and six angels; the former carrying the arms of the six archbishops in the Mexican republic, done in Limoges enamel, on gold, said shields being surrounded by tiny diamonds of great value; following them are small oval frames with inlaid enamel designs on the gold, with their moulding in relief carved with exquisite detail. The shields are united one to another by six angelic figures, with outspread pinions, enameled from scarlet to snowy white, and the aureoles ringed with diamonds. The angels issue from roses, thus referring to the story of the apparition.

The top of the crown is of dual form, six fillets of roses in gold, and of different colors, and six rows of diamonds. The rose fillets are aligned to the archuepiscopal shields, and are with rose branches in relief and wonderfully carved, and the roses themselves spring from bunches of fleur de lis, each with an amethyst inlaid, forming a striking counter-scheme in color to the rubies that burn in the breast of each angel in the body of the crown. There are seven stars of brilliants in the dome, or top.

Upon the jeweled summit of this crown run mouldings, which, like those of the lower portions of the splendid piece, are perfectly ablaze with diamonds, rubies and sapphires, and upon the highest running mould rests a globe showing the American Continent, with Mexico in the place of honor. Upon the globe and within a chaplet of gems and gold is the Mexican eagle with outstretched wings, bearing upon his shoulders a cross richly done in diamonds.

This beautiful and brilliant crown, which is the richest piece of work of its kind used in the world for religious purposes, is suspended above the miraculous painted apron of the Virgin on Guadalupe Day, December 12, but during the rest of the year its place is taken by another crown of plated metal, which was made in this city by the jewelers Diener Brothers, and which was also donated by pious Mexican ladies.

Thus jeweled in the consciousness of the Mexicans is the legend of the Virgin of Guadalupe, whose sacred shrine is said to contain the richest heraldry and a crown of higher value than the famous crown of Charlemagne. Their devotion is ideal to the point of idolatry, and explains the marvelous expenditure of a million and a half dollars, mostly by poor Indians, for the church erected on the hilltop and at its base, a cost exclusive of the value of jewels and gold and silver plate, amounting to nearly three million dollars.

EDWARD C. BUTLER.

THREE WAR STORIES.

In his autobiography Gen. John B. Gordon tells several stories of presentiments which came to Confederate soldiers before battles. He says: "My young brother, Augustus Gordon, captain and later lieutenant-colonel, furnished another illustration of this remarkable foresight of approaching death. Brave and lovable, a modest though brilliant young soldier, he was rapidly winning his way to distinction. A youth of scarcely 21 years, he was in command of the Sixth Regiment of Alabama. Before going into the fight in the Wilderness he quietly said: 'My hour has come.' I joked and chided him. I told him that he must not permit such impressions to affect or take hold upon his imagination. He quickly and firmly replied: 'You need not doubt me. I will be at my post. But this is our last meeting.' Riding at the head of his regiment, with his sword above him, the fire of battle in his eye and words of cheer for his men on his lips, the fatal grape-shot plunged through his manly heart."

Gen. Gordon himself had a presentiment. He had been ordered to storm a strong position of the enemy's at daybreak. Success seemed impossible, but he prepared to obey the order. He tells the story thus: "The weary hours of the night had nearly passed, and by the dim light of my bivouac fire I wrote, with pencil, what I supposed was my last letter to Mrs. Gordon, who, as usual, was near me. I summoned my quartermaster, whose duties did not call him into the fight, and gave him the letter, with directions to deliver it to Mrs. Gordon after I was dead. Mounting my horse, my men now ready, I spoke to them briefly and encouraged them to go with me into the fort. Before the dawn we were moving, and soon ascending the long slope. At every moment I expected the storm of shell and ball that would end many a life, my own among them, but on we swept, and into the fort, to find not a soldier there! It had been evacuated during the night."

As is well known, Gen. Leonidas Polk of the Confederate army was a bishop of the Episcopal Church. His great friend, Gen. Cheatham, on the other hand, was renowned for the freedom of his language. His favorite expression to his men on going into battle was, "Give 'em ——, boys!" Gen. Gordon writes: "On one occasion, as the bishop-general rode along his lines, when they were charging the works in front, and as the rebel yell rang out, his natural enthusiasm carried him, for the moment, off his balance. In the exhilaration of the charge the bishop was lost in the soldier, and he shouted: 'Give it to 'em, boys! Give 'em what Gen. Cheatham says.' "—[Chicago News.

THE BRAVE SIKHS.

DESCRIPTION OF THEIR CITY, CREED AND THEIR SOLDIERING.

[W. E. Curtis in Chicago Record-Herald:] "Just before reaching Lahore we passed through Amritsar, a city which is famous for many things and the capital of the Sikhs, a religious sect bound together by the ties of faith, race and military discipline. They represent a Hindoo heresy led by a reformer named Nanak Shah, who was born at Lahore in 1849 and preached a reformation against idolatry, caste, demon worship, and other doctrines of the Brahmins. His theories and sermons are embraced in a volume known as the "Grath," the Sikh Bible, which teaches the highest standard of morality, purity and courage, and appeals especially to the nobler northern races of India. His followers, who were known as Sikhs, were compelled to fight for their faith, and for that reason were organized on a military basis. Their leaders were warlike men, and when the Mogul power began to decay they struggled with the Afghans for supremacy in Northern India. They have ever since been renowned for their fighting quality; have always been loyal to British authority; for fifty years have furnished bodyguards for the Viceroy of India, the Governor of Bombay, Bengal and other provinces, and so much confidence is placed in their courage, honesty and tact that they are employed as policemen in all the British colonies of the East. You find them everywhere from Tientsin to the Red Sea. They are men of unusual stature, with fine heads and faces, full beards, serious disposition and military airs. They are the only professional fighters in the world. You seldom find them in any other business, and their admirers declare that no Sikh was ever convicted of cowardice or disloyalty.

Amritsar is their headquarters, their religious center and their sacred city. Their temples are more like Protestant churches than those of other Oriental faiths. They have no idol or altars, but meet once a week for prayer and praise. Their preacher reads passages from the "Grath" and prays to their god, who may be reached through the intercession of Nanak Shah, his prophet and their redeemer. They sing hymns similar to those used in Protestant worship, and celebrate communion by partaking of wafers of unleavened bread. Their congregations do not object to the presence of strangers, but usually invite them to participate in the worship.

The great attraction of Amristar is "The Golden Temple" of the Sikhs, which stands in the middle of a lake known as "The Pool of Immortality." It is not a large building, being only fifty-three feet square, but is very beautiful, and the entire exterior is covered with plaster of gold. In the treasury are the original copy of the "Grath" and a large number of valuable jewels which have been collected for several centuries. Among them is one of the most valuable strings of pearls ever in existence.

ABOUT THE KAFFIRS.

In a recent published book on the Kaffirs of South Africa the author tells of the practice of the native chiefs of keeping a court praiser—which might be translated poet laureate—whose business it is to go before the chief and sing his praises. Sometimes it happens that this functionary is apt to be embarrassed for lack of matter, as in the case of the Swazi King Bunu. One day he went out hunting with a hundred warriors, and after a whole day's effort he managed to kill only one miserable little hare. Yet the court praiser ran in front of the king, calling out: "Bunu, the king of the Swazis, the chief of chiefs, has killed a hare. Let all the people listen. It was as big as an ox, as fierce as a lion and as swift as a buck. The brave King Bunu killed the hare all alone. He killed it with his assegai. Listen, ye people. Bunu the King has killed the hare. Without any help the King has killed the hare. It was as terrible as a tiger, as large as an elephant; its eyes were flames of fire; and yet Bunu the great King has killed the hare." The long rigmarole was repeated over and over, while the King followed behind with great gravity.

The bushmen have a quaint belief, according to this same book, that the world was made by a spirit with his left hand—so unsatisfactory a piece of work is it. The notions about astronomy are many and curious, including the familiar one that the old moons are cut up into stars; "but," as an old man told Mr. Kidd, the author, "we are only black men, and know very little about these things." The natives are very respectful to snakes, which they believe to be a revivified form of their ancestors' backbones. They are afraid to look into deep pools lest a monster should lay hold of their shadows and drag them into the water; and they dread being photographed, on the medieval ground that if any enemy gets hold of your portrait he can work you all sorts of harm through its agency. Of course there are witch doctors and rain doctors—most of whom, by the way, come to violent ends at the hands of a disappointed populace—and in Zululand the women sometimes bury their children up to their necks in the ground in the expectation that the heavens will melt with tenderness at the noise they make.

Here is another Kaffir story told in the book: "When the first wagon appeared the people of the kraals all turned out to see the new wonder—a hut which moved on wheels. Mile after mile the people clapped hands and cheered the little wheels, which seemed to form the center of attraction. On being asked what they saw in the small wheels to make them so excited, they replied that they thought it was so plucky of them to be able to keep up with the large ones."—[Chicago News.

California Brooks.

THEIR BEAUTY AND THE WILD LIFE AROUND AND IN THEM.

By a Special Contributor.

SOME men there are who will tell you that the Southwest has no brooks, or if it have, that their beauty is not to be compared with the rippling glory of eastern watercourses. But these are of the unknowing who have never seen the headwaters of the San Gabriel or the mountain source of the Santa Ana, where amid fern-begirt cañon these streams are born of bubbling spring and plashing waterfall. And the trout that wave sleek, silvery fins in boulder shadow or pine root cave are as fat and toothsome as ever mortal man toasted over a fire of dry branches at the end of a day's long tramp. It is hard to analyze our love for anyone or anything; to put down in cold black and white the why and the how and the wherefore; but of all the parts of nature it must follow that there are two kinds of brooks. One is the desert stream that flows down from the other side of the mountains back of us; sluggish and slow, like all the rest of the sandy world around it, it fairly creeps along, blessing in its course that "narrow strip of herbage strown that just divides the desert from the sown," and watering the myriad wild life of the sandy waste of whose existence the casual traveler would not dream were it not for the telltale tracery of tracks they weave at night time beside the stream. Then there is the mountain brook, noisy, careless, always happy and the surest cure for the blues man ever had. The very laughter of the little stream shown to you today ought to start the wine of sunshine and song a-flowing in your veins like the water purling down the cañon. And then, how dignified and broadened, both in mind and body, the same little brook has become when we see it again in the next picture. There the cañon has widened out and the stream become more shallow in order that it may the more easily spread out and do justice to all its friends of flower and bird and bee.

All the life of a Southern California cañon centers around the water flowing in the bottom of it. Over the stream, in the limb of some sycamore or water beech, the tiny humming bird places her thimble-like nest, while a few rods back on the hill the great red-tailed hawk chooses the topmost fork of a giant live oak for her home. Nor do they do this altogether for the water the creek affords, nor yet for the prey the stream calls to the talons of the hawk. Few, if any, of the birds of prey drink any water until they are able to leave their nests, and most of the little animals that would form suitable food for the hawks do their drinking at night, when the big birds are fast asleep. There is a certain companionship, however, between bird and beast draws all three together in a bond of dislikes that is very hard to define, yet I that at the bottom of it all there is a closely akin to ours when we can lie shade of some great tree and watch the brook below, or the aimless gyrations of a endless blue above. All the blossoms of a ers—and that is all the most mercenary make of Southern California—gather the mountain brook; the smoke-flowers of the bend down drifting clouds of palest lilac banks of sand poppies in the more open the sheltered nooks the gold of '49 is banks of aureate violets fringed in emerald and guarded with flaming shafts gorgeous tiger lilies lift their heads. Such ern California brook in general; in particular, of them will have some new secret of life, some new beauty of cañon or forest to you next time. HARRY

seems to me that a brook comes the nearest to answering the cry of the human heart. We are all of us more or less kin to the wild; we respect the sea because she bears on her bosom the commerce of a world; we admire a rolling river, perhaps because of her strength, more likely because of the wheels her waters turn; but we love a brook. Alongside it we can lie at heart's ease and let the world go hang—the little songster of the hills wants neither our money nor our strength, only our time, to give in return the secrets of a woodland world. Song of bird and hum of insect, glory of butterfly wing and patter of shy woodland mouse, these are all compounded in the song of the brook; but he who would interpret must have the "nice ear of Nature" that Lowell tells us about and that Byron must have had, else he never could have heard Cascata del Marmore "tumbling from its headlong height."

Even the old Los Angeles River is pretty and full of the speckled tracery of leaf shadow and California sunshine if you will but follow it back to where it shrinks to a brook again. In some ways I am reminded of old Father Tiber every time I look at the Los Angeles River, for his waters, too, were chained in aqueducts and led to moisten a city set on the hills. And old Tiber's turgid tide must have been not a little like many another Southern California river, fed as it was amid the snows

"Where the eagle's nest
Hangs on the crest
Of the lordly Apennine."

Doubtless many a Roman husbandman prayed to the good old father to send snows a-plenty that he and his might raise fields full of about the same crops that you and I raise if we are fortunate enough to own a bit of this western sunland. Somewhere back in those mountains Tiber was only a brook, but how he must have grown to have borne up brave Horatius, and in what hard luck would that noble Roman have been had he tried to save himself by swimming the Los Angeles River!

It may well be that the brooks of Southern California are not to be compared to those of the northern end of the State, but there are not less than a dozen as pretty little streams that rise in the mountains back of San Bernardino, Pomona, and so on down the coast as you could find in many a day's journey in any other part of the world. There are two different kinds of rivers in the southwest, and as all rivers are born of brooks, it

BRIEF ANECDOTES GATHERED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES.

Compiled for The Times.

A Prank of Young Medicos.

BACK in the '90s, a German named Boch kept a saloon in Philadelphia, close to the dormitory building of the University of Pennsylvania. The college boys spent many of the cold winter evenings in Boch's side room, and most of their spare cash found its way regularly into the thrifty German's money drawer. Boch seemed to appreciate the boys' patronage, but he was never moved to invite them to "have something on the house," and finally the boys rebelled, and decided to get even. One day the body of a man who had been killed in an accident was received at the dissecting-room of the medical department of the University, and the boys at once planned their scheme of revenge on Boch. That evening, about twenty of the boys got together, and by contributing each some cast-off garment, succeeded in furnishing a fairly presentable wardrobe for the new arrival in the dissecting-room. After getting him togged out, they proceeded in a compact body to Boch's, hustling the new member along in the center of the party. All lined up at the bar, and whisky was ordered all around. After finishing their drinks, the boys started for the door, one by one, until finally no one remained but the "dead one," who leaned unsteadily against the rail at the end of the bar. After waiting a few moments in silence, Boch made a request for payment for the refreshments, without, however, eliciting any response. After repeating the question in vain, Boch attempted to shake his apparently sleeping customer into consciousness, but at the first gentle push, the latter fell in a heap on the floor, and remained motionless. The boys, who had been watching from the outside, now rushed in, and after a hasty examination, pronounced their comrade dead. Two of their number summoned a policeman, who had been let into the secret, while the others stood guard over the now frightened Boch. The policeman, upon his arrival, charged Boch with killing the dead student, and conducted him to the office of a neighboring magistrate, followed by the students and a crowd of passers-by, who had been attracted by the commotion. The policeman told the circumstances briefly to the magistrate, who said to the prisoner: "Boch, you are accused of knocking this man down, and causing his death. What have you to say for yourself?" Boch replied: "Well, judge, I acknowledge I knocked him down, but I did it in self-defense; he struck me first."

Strictly Confidential.

"THERE is a story I once heard about Gabe Bouck's handwriting," said Henry M. Davis of Superior at the Hotel Pfister: "During a session of the Legislature at Madison a bill was presented which Bouck was very anxious to have killed. So he wrote a letter to his member from Oshkosh, and stated his objections to the bill and asked him to have it killed. The member saw the letter was from Bouck, but that was as far as he could go. He sat up nearly all night trying to make it out, and in the morning he was in a 'state of mind.' He had been able to make out only two words. He took one after another into his confidence until he had consulted nearly every member of the Legislature. After about a week, with the aid of ex-printers and experts, he found out to his horror that Bouck wanted the bill killed. It had been passed without opposition a day or two before. Bouck came down from Oshkosh in a rage, and hunted up the member [illegible] him if he had not received his letter, and [illegible] no attention to it. The member explained [illegible] and told him he had found out what [illegible] after he had called in the services of [illegible] Legislature.

"Even then, he said, there were a couple of words at the end of the letter which no one could make out. [illegible] the letter and asked what they were? '[illegible]' roared Bouck, 'that is "strictly confidential."'"—[Milwaukee Sentinel

The late Gen. John B. Gordon, the last of the corps commanders of Gen. Lee's Confederate army of Northern Virginia, gave this story to the narrator only [illegible] before he died: A few days before Christmas, [illegible] when the army of Gen. Lee was suffering its [illegible] privations, there was a dramatic scene in the [illegible] judge-advocate-general. The morning was [illegible] wind was bleak, and the ground was covered [illegible]. The wood fire seemed only to make the cold more biting.

[illegible] Cooper, wearing the gray uniform of a private in the Confederate army, stood before a [illegible] charged with desertion. The facts had been [illegible] prosecution, and the prisoner was asked [illegible] any witnesses he might have for his defense. [illegible] calmly replied, "I have no witnesses."

[illegible] at the calmness and dignity of the soldier, [illegible] indifference with which he seemed to be submitting [illegible] inevitable fate, Gen. "[illegible] a reason," replied Cooper, "but it will not [illegible] a military tribunal."

"[illegible] you are mistaken," replied the general. "[illegible] charged with the highest crime known to military [illegible] and it is your duty to make known the cause which influenced your action."

[illegible] Cooper approached the president of the court, and presented a letter, saying as he did so, "There, general, is what led me to go." The letter was offered as the prisoner's defense. It was in these words:

Dear Edward:—Since your connection with the Confederate army I have been prouder of you than ever before. I would not have you do anything wrong for the world; but, before God! Edward, unless you come home, we must die. Last night I was aroused by little Eddie crying. I called to him and said: "What is the matter, Eddie?" He said, "Oh, mamma, I am so hungry!" And Lucy, your darling Lucy, she never complains, but she is growing thinner and thinner every day. Before God! Edward, unless you come home we must die.

YOUR MARY.

Turning to the prisoner, Gen. Battle said: "What did you do when you received that letter?" Cooper replied, "I made application for a furlough. It was rejected. Again I made application, and it was rejected. That night I wandered around our camp, thinking of my home, and the wild eyes of Lucy looking up at me, and the burning words of Mary seething in my brain. I was no longer the Confederate soldier—I was the father of Lucy and the husband of Mary. If every gun in the battery had been fired at me, I would have crossed those lines. When I reached home Mary flung her arms about my neck and sobbed: "Oh, my Edward, I am so glad you got your furlough.' She must have felt me shudder, for she turned pale as death, and catching her breath at every word she said: 'Have you come without your furlough? Go back, Edward. Go back! Let me and the children go down to the grave, but for heaven's sake do not tarnish the honor of our name!'"

Every officer on that court-martial was visibly affected by the defense, but each in turn pronounced the verdict, "Guilty." The proceedings of the court were reviewed by Gen. Lee, and upon the record was written:

Headquarters A. N. V.—The finding of the court is approved. The prisoner is pardoned and will return to his company.
R. E. LEE, General.

The court-martial could reach no other conclusion than to find him guilty of desertion. The commanding general could pardon him, and did pardon him. Edward Cooper was afterward a brave Confederate soldier. The officers raised some money out of their slender means, and sent relief to the wife and children.—[Philadelphia Press.

A Lenten Sacrifice.

THEY were sitting in the gloaming.

It was a home-made gloaming, brought about by a judicious manipulation of the thumbcocks on the gas fixtures.

Besides sitting in the gloaming, they were also sitting on a couch.

They did not occupy all the room on the couch.

"Ferdy," she said, in tones that reached an inch and a half—yet they found lodgment in his heart.

By a little figuring, dear reader, you can find out where her head was.

"Ferdy," she said, "do you know it is Lent?"

"Yes, darling," he murmured.

"And don't you think that we ought to give up something?"

"Angel," he cried, "do you speak of giving up? Am I not going to take you to an after-theater dinner party and buy you roses? Doesn't that mean a lot of giving up?"

"Oh," she cried, "you do not know what I mean. We ought to give up some of the pleasures we enjoy. Wallie Wabbleton told me yesterday that he had given up smoking. Now couldn't we—I know you understand what it means for me to say it—couldn't we give up our very sweetest pleasure—our kisses, during Lent?"

A struggle was going on within the young man's breast.

Finally the light of victory shone in his face, and he said:

"I will."

. . . .

Gentle reader, it was two nights later.
They sat in a similar gloaming
And on the same sofa.
Both looked miserable.
"Ferdy," she said, softly.
"Yes, my idol," he replied.
"I saw Wallie Wabbleton today."
"Yes?"
"And, Ferdy——"
"Yes?"
"He was smoking!"

Both Were Very Ill.

"EVERYBODY and his neighbor has been having a short or long pull with the grip, influenza, cold, or whatever you please to term it," said Representative Little of Arkansas, "and this fact reminds me of a good story told by our family physician out home."

"This good doctor was called to the home of a recently rich family to see his wife, who was suffering with a cold. She was dressed in rather showy, carefully made deshabille, and was clearly doing her utmost to make an impression and show the pill dispenser that she was 'somebody.'

"'And how is the madam today?' the doctor asked, as he sank into one of the easy chairs.

"'Oh, shockingly ill,' was the reply, trying to look interesting in spite of her red nose and blear eyes.

"'A slight cold,' suggested the doctor.

"'No, the per--re-vailing lesgripe or influe-en-za,' she drawled out, pronouncing the words as if endeavoring to establish the character of a fashionable woman by her elegant manner and pronunciation.

"'And you are ill, too?' said the doctor, almost bursting with amusement, as he addressed the husband, plain, blunt man, who sat near by sniffing every moment.

"'Yes, I'm sick, too, doctor,' he answered, wiping his nose on his coat sleeve. 'I've got this cussed horse distemper, and none of your les-grippe or in-flu-ranza.'

"The wife said, 'Why James,' and added aside to the doctor that 'James is not exactly right when not in premature health.'"—[Washington Times.

His Qualifications.

FATHER MACKIN of St. Paul's Catholic Church of Washington, D. C., relates an amusing incident that came to his notice while walking recently near his parsonage. Father Mackin in his walk chanced to meet three lads, two of whom, altar boys at St. Paul's, were dragging the third toward the priest.

"Father," said one of the altar boys, "this kid wants to be an altar boy like us."

"Indeed," said the father, running his hand over the lad's curls. "My son, have you been baptized?"

The child looked at him for a moment, puzzled. Then he exclaimed:

"No, sir, not baptized, but I've been vaccinated."—[New York Times.

The Jag's Perspicacity.

HE was in a condition commonly described as "three sheets in the atmosphere" when he boarded a 1 o'clock north-bound car on Calvert street a few nights ago.

He smiled happily, though rather unintelligibly, at the passengers who smoked on the back platform. Then he saw the conductor.

Approaching that dignitary with a confidential air, he beckoned him aside, and said:

"Thass mo'orman up ther'n front, ain't it?"

"Yes," said the conductor conciliatingly.

"I thought thass mo'orman up front soons I seen 'im," explained the drunk man, still confidentially.

After a short time he again approached the conductor and said in the same confidential way:

"I'm ri' 'bout it, ain't I? Thass mo'orman up front there a'right, ain't it?"

"Yes," said the conductor, patiently, "it is."

At intervals of two minutes the same important question was sprung by the disciple of John Barleycorn, until the conductor had alomst lost patience. At last that busy man said petulantly:

"Oh, cut that out—of course that's the motorman."

"Thass what I' been sayin' all time. I's jist sayin' thass mo'orman up front—didn' no 'fense—thass mo'orman up front there a'right, a'right, a'right.

The conductor, seeing that the man was incorrigible in his then condition, stepper inside the car to avoid further annoyance, and the candidate for delirium turned leeringly to a back-platform passenger and said, with an enthusiastic chuckle:

"Be funny 'f 'twasn't mo'orman up there, now wouldn't it?"—[Baltimore American.

What All Men Should Know.

THEY sat together on the sofa watching the dying embers. They had been silent for some time. He moved uneasily. It was apparent that something was on his mind. He looked at her furtively. She was a beautiful girl. He determined at last to make the plunge, and turned his face resolutely toward hers.

"Dear," he said, "I am going to ask you a question that I have never asked before. I hope it will not shock you. You will notice by a glance at the clock that it is nearly midnight. There is not a sound in the house, and it is evident that your father and mother have both gone to bed. There is no one else to disturb us. All is serene. The gas overhead is turned down to the right point, and these embers shed just the correct glow. A soft, sentimental feeling that I have not been able to overcome has begun to steal over me. I hope it has over you. Now, what I want to ask you is this: Considering all the circumstances I have mentioned, do you think it would be quite proper for me to kiss you?"

The beautiful creature at his side turned impulsively and laid a delicate hand on his arm.

"Do you want to know what I really think?" she said, earnestly.

"Yes."

"Then, considering everything, I don't think it would be proper for you not to kiss me."—[Town Topics.

A Clever Imitation.

A CERTAIN Harlem man has two bright children. They are quick at imitation, and have a talent for making up games in which they cleverly burlesque their elders. A few days ago their mother found they were playing "doctor." The youngest child was the patient, with head wrapped in a towel, and the elder was the physician, with a silk hat and a cane. The mother, unseen by the little ones, listened at the doorway.

"I feel awful bad," said the patient.

"We'll fix all that," said the doctor, briskly. "Lemme see your tongue."

Out came the tiny red indicator.

"Hum! Hum! Coated," said the doctor, looking very grave indeed. Then, without a word of warning, the skilled physician hauled off and gave the patient a smart slap in the region of the ribs.

"Ouch!" cried the sufferer.

"Feel any pain there?" inquired the doctor.

"Yes," said the patient.

"I thought so," said the healer. "How's the other side?"

"It's all right," said the patient, edging away.

Thereupon the doctor produced a small bottle filled with bread pills and placed it on the table.

"Take one of these pellets," he said, "dissolved in water, every seventeen minutes, alter-nit-ly."

"How long mus' I take 'em?" groaned the patient.

"Till you die," said the doctor. "Good morning."—[New York Press.

Big Irrigation Enterprise.

COMPLETION OF THE GREAT MODESTO AND TURLOCK CANALS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE inauguration of the biggest single irrigation project ever undertaken and accomplished in the United States has just been celebrated in Modesto, Cal. This enterprise involved the building of an immense dam across the Tuolumne River as it debouches from the lower range of foothills skirting the Sierra Nevadas and thence flows westward to the San Joaquin River. The area to be brought under the canals and laterals of the water so diverted approximates 260,000 acres of fine, fertile valley land in Stanislaus county, one of the northernmost of the tier of counties comprising the great San Joaquin Valley, a valley which is 250 miles long by fifty miles wide.

This project was first launched in 1892 by the farmers of that great wheat-raising section, who organized themselves into what is known as the Modesto and Turlock Irrigation Districts. The Modesto district represents 82,000 acres, and the Turlock district 176,000 acres. It is a noteworthy fact that these systems of irrigation were promoted and built and are owned and controlled exclusively by the owners of the lands within the two districts. Five per cent. bonds, running for forty years, were issued. These bonds are made payable in installments commencing at the end of twenty years, when one-twentieth of the principal will become payable annually for the following twenty years, or the bonds may be refunded.

Construction work on the dam and the main canals was begun in 1892 and the dam was completed in the following year, at a cost of $550,000. About $400,000 worth of work was done on the canals when progress was interrupted by litigation brought on by the dissenting owners of big tracts of land in the proposed districts. These protestants represented mainly the owners of vast wheat ranches who were opposed to the segregation of their holdings, which they foresaw must come with the advent of the irrigation enterprise. As in the old days, the cattle owners in the great San Joaquin Valley opposed the sowing of grain, so in these later years the owners of the great grain ranches opposed the coming of the small farmer. But after costly litigation, extending over a period of ten years, all differences were settled and the work was finally completed in both districts in 1903, and the systems were opened and formally inaugurated on the 22nd day of April, this year, amid the rejoicing of all Stanislaus county, and thousands of guests from all parts of the State.

The site of the great La Grange Dam, across the Tuolumne River, is thirty-two miles from the heart of the irrigation districts, and presents a scene of beauty and grandeur equaled only in this country by Niagara Falls. The length of this dam is 327 feet, and its thickness at its base is 97 feet, and its crest 12 feet. Its height is 127 feet and the flow of the river over the dam averages 10,000 cubic feet per second.

The cañon through which the river flows at this point is narrow, and the river backs up for several miles into the hills. This dam is, however, in no sense a reservoir, but merely a diverting dam to secure the height necessary for the induction of the water into the two main canals.

The Modesto district main canal, feeding out of the north side of the dam, is 45 miles long, is 57 feet wide on the bottom, and will supply 90 miles of laterals averaging from 18 to 40 feet wide on the bottom. This main canal with its laterals has a capacity of 750 cubic feet per second, or 38,000 miner's inches, and could supply nearly 200,000 acres of land. There are, however, under this canal at the present time only 82,000 acres. Modesto district's share of the bonded indetbedness is $1,350,000.

On the Turlock side the main canal is 22 miles long, 74 feet wide on the bottom, and is designed to carry a depth of 8 feet of water. There are two main laterals on this side, aggregating 30 miles, 40 feet wide on the bottom, and six sub-laterals aggregating 80 miles, which average from 18 to 40 feet in width. The Turlock system is capable of carrying 1500 cubic feet of water per second, or 75,000 miner's inches. This would be sufficient to irrigate 375,000 acres of land, but the present district on the Turlock side embraces only 176,000 acres. The Turlock district share of the bonded indebtedness is $1,200,000, and the average cost per acre per year to the consumer is 42 cents.

It will be seen from the foregoing that this joint system is capable of supplying water to a vast area of land yet to be brought into the two districts. The present cost of water to the owner-consumer is, in the Modesto district, about 52 cents an acre. The land irrigated so far is principally alfalfa land, and the system of "checking" is used, each "check" generally comprising about two acres. As the lands become more settled and the country develops, this water will be applied to fruit and vines and all general purposes.

These irrigation districts are organized and operated under the State law known as the Wright Act, and each district organization is controlled by a board of five directors. These directors are chosen from among the land owners and are usually men of character and high standing in the community. Two members of this board serve for terms of two years each, and the remaining three for terms of four years each. These directors have full governing power over their individual districts, except that in the case of issuing bonds it must be first submitted to a vote of the people.

This law, when intelligently and ho believed to bring lower rates and more tions to the users of water in irrigation is usual where such enterprises are contro corporations. Certain it is that the far laus county are rejoicing in the completion work, and a period of prosperity has set in shared in by all.

The soil of these districts is a light lo adapted to the raising of all kinds of grain, potatoes, and corn. Fig trees are being town of Ceres, in the Turlock district, handsome profits. Dairying is another section that is being rapidly built up, years ago butter was being imported, now

This section of the valley is free from being no slough land, and both the Southern Santa Fé Railroads, as well as the San Jo olumne Rivers, afford cheap communicatio water at San Francisco, 114 miles distant.

The best of farming land sells at from the water rights goes with the lands. Th

The Resurrectionist.

His Story of the One-Lungers and His Advice to Them.

By a Special Contributor.

NO word picture could describe him, a camera was needed to give the long flap of the pepper-and-salt trouser over the thin old leg; the well-worn old stick with the brass nob on the end, which was strapped onto the stump of his other leg at the knee; the crooked old cane which was a part of the weazened old man; the long, thin, grizzled hair, which, with the carefulness of fifty years before, he parted painstakingly in the middle behind; and the watery blue eyes, faded and dimmed by his seventy years of wondrous sight-seeing. All of these things and his old coat of army blue, were he—a long-familiar figure in the little town. Ill health had brought him to California, and love of flowers had held him here. A lover of flowers, he reigned king in a veritable paradise of them, miraculously, it would seem, tending to all their many needs, even while handicapped by the stump of a leg to which the old stick was fastened at his knee.

"There!" said the Old Man, "there they set, three on 'em—here fer their health; they come here half dead and set around uh-spittin' an' uh-coughin', 'spectin', just b'cause it's Californie, thet they'd ought tuh git well on climate. I'm allus uh-noticin' 'em, round the hotel here, when I'm putterin' uh-roun, tendin' tu the flowers an' I've got tu know some on 'em real well, dependin' on the breed on 'em. But I tell yuh it doan last long, they mostly dies tu soon. It does beat me how they does. When they git tu coughin' right smart, back east, in some o' them graveyard-fillin' offices an' things, they up an' come out here tu uh hotel, an' take tu settin' an' eatin' an' sleepin' an' settin' uhgain, an' they don't get no better. I reckon heaven's climate yitself couldn't benefit 'em none, an' tain't long 'fore they dies an' goes home in a box tu their folks. I see one young chap come yere, two year ago, 'long with his wife, a mighty pretty, gritty, brainy little piece—an' he hed it comin' on pretty bad, shure, hed been workin' fer five er six year by gas light in one uv them offices, an' his lungs wuz gone. So he comes out here fer tu try it. He ust tu set the hours out there on the verandy, stooped over, with his hands uh-hangin'—jest uh-broodin', uh body could see. An' his wife couldn't rouse him none—I'd see 'er talk an' talk tu 'im, an' he'd jest set an' shake his head.

"One day she come out where I was weedin' an' ast me about these here Matilija poppies, an' if they grow wild, an' how we raises 'em, an' I told her. An' I sez, 'What uh needs is uh bronco an' saddle, an' go out into the hills,' I sez, 'an' see fer yerself how they follers the washes an' sand, an' how the yuccas grows,' I sez, somehow so solemn like, on the hillsides, pointin' up to heaven, as tu make an unbeliever wonder what makes 'em feel so queer.' An' I sez, 'that's what he needs.' An' I, I've watched 'em fer six year here in this one hotel—come an' sit uhround fer six months er so, an' then seen 'em hauled out tu, an' nailed up tight an' started for the East. Only some try tu git home an' up in the mountains; I reckon they're most dead when they git there.' When I sez that, I see her git white round the mouth, an' I thought she'd uh fell over; but she stood it out. An' I sez, sez I, 'Looky here, now, I hev a cure fer these here one-lungers, leastwise the ones thet jest comin' on. It's exericse,' says I. 'Uh horse an' uh boat, an' uh gun an' legs that will keep 'em busy; with plenty uv meat,' sez I, 'raw meat an' blood, boiled, mebby, if th' sawbones sez so, and whisky.' Though I'm strickly temperate myself an' never tech a drop, 'cept long times apart on Sunday, with a neighbor, when they're havin' their light refreshments at the church. You do all thet,' sez I, 'an' yuh'll do the undertaker yit. Begin,' sez I, 'with the horse an' uh little ov the legs, then uh boat an' more legs an' then the gun an' mostly legs, an' all the time put in a little of the whisky in a little cream, an' maybe a bit of a raw egg whisked up an' into it.' An' you'd ought tu hev seen thet woman. An' she grabbed my hand, and blessed if she didn't kiss my hand! Yes, sir, this hand!" And the old man held it out to the young man who sat in a chair at his side among the flowers. "'Tell 'im,' I sez, 'an' try it.'

"'No, no,' sez she, 'thet's where women beat men.' An' by gum they do, fer if she'd told him all thet, he'd uh just set there an' shook his head at 'er, uh-smilin' in a sickly way. 'No,' sez she,' thet wouldn't do. I'll do it gradual, but I'll do it!' An' I'll be danged if I wouldn't bet this year bed uv pansies on 'er. 'Jest watch me,' sez she. An' I done it. I watched thet woman uh thumb half-year. The furst day I didn't see no signs, but the next I see her thread roll out acrost the porch, an' he didn't jump fer it, same ez common, tu save it, an' he set there uh-lookin' et it uh minute, an' then he gets up and walks over and hands it tu her kind of reproachful an' how-could-you-do-it-like, an' I was uh-trainin' them vines on the virandy, thet day, an' she says, 'Oh, George!' sez she, 'look at them poppies over there.' An' I told him tu come on, an' I kept him there most fifteen minutes, an' told all over how they grow and pointed out the Matilija Springs over yonder, where they grows an' gits their name from. An' forty things about Ventura, an' the flower farms, an' the biggest orchards in the world thet's here. An' then, I'm blest if she didn't come out an' take him in' an' shake 'er head over it. Well, it went on longer, an' more uv it then I can tell now, an' she done all I sed—only in her own way. I reckon she worked him like women allus does men. Fer one thing, she told me private she payed a quack five dollars tu hev him tell him that she'd die with a creepin' disease if she didn't do them livin' things, an' then she cried an' told him she didn't care anyhow, she didn't want to live nohow an' him uh-failin', an' he wuz took in an' roused up, an' told her she must, an' finally she said she would if he would, an' by thet time he was willin' tu do anything, an' they both done it together, only she told me she bluffed some on the diet, because she said, with so much exercise an' so much judicious stimulant, an' so much meat an' even fresh blood, she was uh-gettin' so fat an' rosy and well that she didn't dare risk it fer fear he'd ketch on an' spoil it all fer hisself. So she renigged some on the diet. Did he git well? Well, I reckon! Wouldn't I 'ev bet this pansy bed—but maby yuh don't know what them pansies air. He's uh-ranchin' it out in the Santa Paula Valley now. You see ez soon ez he got tu feelin' pretty good, an' got some blood an' energy an' quit uh-spittin' an' hawkin', he wuz fer goin' back—yes, sir, to thet 'undertaker's friend' office. I didn't say nothin'. I didn't hev no call tu. She done the sayin', all right. 'Go back!' she says. 'Not if I know it! Never! Not if I hev tu take in washin' an' you hev to work by the day,' sez she. 'Yer uh Mexican,' sez she.

"That was a year ago. They still had a little money, an' they bought an acre or two, down there, an' up with uh lean-tu shack, an' moved out. An' when he wanted tu go into an office in town—fer they hadn't nothin', any more, from what they'd saved while he wus uh suicidin', an' she up an' said no, it was more honor'ble fer him to work by the day out of doors, then tu misspend the health the Lord had restored tu him. An' he done it, he pitched hay and husked walnuts an' thrashed beans an' worked in the apricots, and helped in orchards, an' they jest begun agin, out there on their own place. Say, they're happy, I reckon. I go out there considerable, uv uh Sunday, tu dinner. They're uh-doin' fine. They make over me, sure, only onct I heard her call me 'the old reserectionalist,' but I didn't mind it none.

"The other special case I cared about turned out the other way. I took tu him, an' I tried the same arguments on her, but I reckon she was a different species, one them there rogues thet wuz missed pullin' out, I reckon, in weedin' time. Anyway, she jest folded her hands an' said she'd tried everything, an' if the climate didn't help him now, nothin' wouldn't, fer she couldn't stand the heat herself, farther south, an' she wuz resigned, an' rolled up her eyes an' sed thet 'the Lord giveth an' the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord.' She said in his health he considered it his duty to provide fur her widowed futur, an' thet it took so much money to keep up the insurance, an' talkin' tu 'im didn't do no good, he felt so no account an' done up. It would uh took something tu hev roused him, an' there wun't nobody tu do it, I couldn't, with her resignation to his takin' off agin me—an' he died. He want as bad off, tu begin on, ez Rodgers hed been, either; but I reckon he's dust by now. He went home in a lead coffin, an' she went home Pullman, in a black dress an' crape, an' all that disgustin' show, and I thought ez I see it all, that likely it wus the 'nsurance money wuz uh-takin' 'em both. I tell you, if a man's single, it's his own lookout whether or not he git's well, an' ef he's married, it's hern."

The old gardener leaned on his spade as he balanced himself carefully upon his one sound leg and watched the old stick sink into the sand. The young fellow to whom he had been talking between spadefuls of dirt, coughed hoarsely, as he whittled reflectively upon a stick in his hand. "Well," said the old man, "I must be uh-gettin' tu work. I must be uh-gettin' my rake an' be uh-rakin.'" The young fellow lifted a pair of twinkling eyes to the old man's grave ones. "And I," said he, "I must be inquiring around for a broken bronco, I think." And he wrung the old man's hand, and left him, dragging his feet painfully as he moved.

The old man rubbed his hands gleefully, as a lad who suspicions a holiday. "There," he muttered, "we'll be uh-cheatin' uv the undertaker again, d'rectly, if we don't mind."

BELT OF CALM AT PACIFIC END OF CANAL.

At the eastern extremity of the canal the difficulties which a sailing vessel may expect to encounter will arise from a superabundance of wind rather than a lack of it. At the western extremity, on the other hand, these conditions will be completely reversed.

Upon emerging from the canal into the Pacific Ocean a vessel will enter an extensive belt of calms and light airs, which render navigation by sail more tedious than in any other frequented portion of the sea. The width of this region varies—at some points wide, at others narrow. In that portion of the North Pacific included between the American coast and the meridian of 120 degrees west it reaches a maximum, extending in latitude from a point one or two degrees north of the equator to Cape San Lucas, the southern extremity of Lower California. In both approaching and leaving Panama, irrespective of the port from which or toward which bound, a sailing vessel must of necessity navigate a greater or less width of the belt of calms, and in estimating for a given voyage the saving of time effected by the use of the canal the delay arising from this cause must not be neglected.—[National Geographic Magazine.

[Paris Correspondence London Leader:] There is no woman in the world more attentive to the details of her toilet than the Parisienne. Every item of her dress is always carefully thought out. There is none of the haphazard method of the English woman. The gloves and petticoats of a French woman are always impeccable, and in fact her gloves are so important a part of her toilet in her estimation, that once a year the larger shops of Paris have what is known as an "Exposition de gants," that is to say, a special exhibition of gloves, when all the new models are brought before the public, and when the older and more classical models are sold at a very great reduction in price. The wise woman buys her stock of gloves for a whole year, if possible, at this sale, as the prices are wonderfully reduced, and the choice is enormous. Long evening gloves, which generally cost considerable sums, are often to be found at a reduction of 40 per cent.

The New Idea.

The novelty of this season in the matter of gloves is a new model called "le Monceau," though I believe other variations of it exist under other names. This glove is peculiarly cut, with the view of reducing the apparent size of the hand, and is fashioned with a single seam, which falls in a straight line just at the bottom of the thumb seam, where it is fastened with small buttons, or with a "pression." It is made of fine kid, and can be had in all colors.

Another new kind of glove which seems to be very popular this season is the white kid glove made with a soft gauntlet, which is lined with some contrasting color in a pale tone of fine kid. The idea is that the gauntlet when once pulled over the hand should be worn slightly turned back, forming a sort of cuff or "revers" of contrasting color. White or pale grey, or lilac or straw-color looks very well. This mode probably originated in the fact that the gauntlet glove was sometimes worn with a jacket having the large revers on the cuffs of the old "habit a la Francaise," which invariably pushes back the gauntlet, which looks most untidy when unlined. These soft gauntleted gloves are most fashionable made in pure white, and are a specialty of the Louvre, which is as famous among Parisiennes for its gloves as for its silks.

Another novelty in the matter of gloves which will appeal greatly to the economical woman is the washing glove. This is more especially made in white, and considering the heavy bills one has to pay nowadays at the cleaner's for the cleaning of one's white kid gloves, this innovation is not to be despised. And it is not only one kind of kid which can be made washable, but by means of some new preparation almost any kind of kid glove may be easily washed at home in one's own wash hand-basin.

Tyrolean gloves, with or without buttons and made of rough kid, are made in washable qualities at as low a rate as a shilling a pair. Even white suede gloves are now made washable, and cost no more than the ordinary kind.

The finest "chevreau glace" also can be washed at home. All one has to do is to put on the gloves and wash them in one's own hand-basin with soap, just as if one were washing one's hands. They are then rinsed in clear water and drawn off the hands. Great care must be taken not to elongate the fingers, and it will certainly improve them if they are immediately drawn on to a hand-block of wood, sold for the purpose. I, however, warn all intending buyers that they will require a great deal of patience so far as the drying of the gloves is concerned, for it generally takes about two days and two nights for a pair of home-washed gloves to regain their exact original color.

READING BY ARTIFICIAL LIGHT.

It is almost universally believed that the best form of reading lamp is one which, by means of an effective shade, concentrates the greater portion of the light upon the reading matter. Furthermore, the lamp is usually one of the "drop-light" sort, which brings the flame near and below the reader's eyes. The result sought after is, that much light be precipitated on the page, and on the page only, while the surrounding parts of the room be weakly illuminated, even to gloominess.

If this condition be obtained an ideal state of affairs is presumed to exist, and, at first, it looks very plausible, so plausible, indeed, that it is usually accepted as a positive fact not to be gainsaid. But it must be refuted. The custom, though of long standing, and of almost unquestioned correctness, is a bad one, and doubly harmful because of the strong hold it has upon the public mind.

The best method of lighting artificially when the sourse of light is a bright one, is to place the light considerably above the head, holding the reading matter in such a position as to be illuminated as much by the reflected light from the surrounding surfaces as from the direct rays from the flame, thus creating an effect more nearly resembling "daylight" conditions."—[Jewelers' Weekly Circular.

USELESS TALK.

Grouch: Yes, and such a stupid fellow. He hasn't any sense at all.

Ascum: Ah! then you won't have him as a son-in-law.

Grouch: I? What have I to do with it? The idea of his coming to ask me when the girl and her mother are satisfied. If he had any sense he'd know that settled it.—[Philadelphia Press.

Great Bear Hunters.

FAMOUS MOUNTAINEERS AND THEIR ADVENTURES WITH BRUIN.

By a Special Contributor.

IN THE primeval forests, high up in the Arizona mountain ranges, are yet to be found almost every species of wild animal indigenous to the Rocky Mountain region. Bear, elk, antelpoe, deer, mountain lion (or cougars,) mountain sheep, and a host of smaller animals. The bear are of three-varieties: silvertip, cinnamon and black. Specimens of each have been killed weighing as much as a thousand pounds, although commonly the silvertip is the largest, also the most ferocious, and none but old hunters have the fortitude to hunt these animals in their haunts far from the abodes of men.

Old hunters there are in the Territory who have hunted bear for the past twenty-five years. Their favorite time of year for hunting them is in the fall when the first nipping frosts have caused the mast to fall, and Bruin, although he is not averse to killing beef and mutton on the range, has a particular liking for the mast of acorns, piñon nuts and juniper berries abundant on the mountain slopes at this season. Also the hunter knows that Bruin is likely to be very fat and will furnish a plentiful supply of meat for his hungry dogs and "b'ar grease" for his camp cooking.

Old man McCarty of Camp Verde, Arizona, a grizzled "old-timer," was one of the best known hunters. For twenty years he had hunted bear in the Mogollon Mountains; had killed hundreds of them, varying his vocation by trapping and running down mountain lions, for which he was paid liberally by the stockmen. With a pack of a dozen dogs and armed with a double-barreled shotgun, heavily charged with buckshot, and a long hunting knife, he would pack into the mountains, every fall, and return laden with bear pelts. His method was, after the dogs had started the bear, to follow them on horseback across the cañons and ridges until Bruin stopped in a thicket or among the rocks to fight off his pursuers, when McCarty would dismount and, fearlessly advancing, would shoot the bear while he was occupied with the dogs. If, as sometimes happened, the bear charged him on sight, he would wait until Bruin reared on his hind feet within a few yards to "hug" him, and then fire the shotgun full in the bear's face. If there was any fight left in the bear after this double discharge of buckshot, the dogs and hunting knife soon finished him.

Old man McCarty always hunted alone. Never would he have anyone accompany him, and many of his acquaintances prophesied that some of his hunts would be his last. But the old man merely laughed. Killing bear had become as easy for him as killing rabbits was to the average sportsman. In the fall of 1901, McCarty, with his dogs, packed into the Clear Creek country, high up in the Mogollons, for his annual bear hunt. A wild, rough country is the Clear Creek region, full of deep gorges, high ridges and bears. A few days after his departure, one of his dogs, badly bitten, arrived at a settlement on the Verde River, followed by his riderless horse. [illegible] parties at once started out to find the old hunter, but a light snow fell, covering all the trails, and they returned without finding him. J. CLINTON BRODIE.

HOW TO RAISE A LAUGH.

A COMEDIAN TELLS ABOUT THE UNCERTAINTY OF MOST AUDIENCES.

[New York Tribune:] "The manager gambles when he buys a play, the actor gambles when he inserts business which he thinks will get laughs, and they both gamble on every audience that files into the theater," said a comedian. "Your dresser comes in, after looking through a hole in the curtain, and reports that the house is 'great.' You go out and throw a joke at them, and they sit like a bunch of dyspeptics studying out a new diet. If it is too hot a night, they don't laugh. If it is too cold a night, they shiver until the middle of the second act. One rule you can count upon, however. A scattered audience does not laugh heartily. Take a thousand people and scatter them around the Metropolitan Operahouse, and spring the best jokes ever written upon them, and they will snicker in a lonesome fashion. They are lonesome. They are too far apart. Put those same thousand persons in the old Madison Square Theater or the Princess, and they will howl at exactly the same jokes. They are close together; there is a comradeship of mirth, and a fellow is not afraid that if he laughs out loud his laughter will be echoed through a half-empty house. That is, one reason why actors like to play to packed houses. The manager has his own reasons.

"One thing is sure—you can't get laughs on mere lines. Situations make laughs, particularly if the comedian is getting the worst of it. The harder time the comedian has, poor devil, the harder the audience laughs. I once had a funny line which in itself failed utterly. The woman working opposite me said: 'Get out of here. No money, no dinner.' 'Oh, very well,' I replied, 'then have supper early.' That line ought to have brought a laugh; but it didn't. So the next time I said it I turned sidewise to the audience, took hold of my stomach as if it were empty, looked prayerfully toward heaven and murmured, 'Then, pray heaven, we have supper early.' And the house yelled. It was the action, the bit of business—not the line.

"At rehearsal an actor will often approach a comedian and say, 'That's a great bit you have in that scene.' That is just the time I expect to fall down. The bit that appeals to the actor does not appeal to the audience. When a play is excruciatingly funny to the company during rehearsals we always feel 'leary' about its success. I try to imagine where the laughs will come, and allow for them in rehearsal and on the first night, using what I call judgment. When the first night arrives, the audience teaches me where the laughs do come, and then generally I go back to my dressing-room and throw my judgment out of the window.

"I think every comedian will admit that he enjoys his matinee audiences best. Women and children are less sophisticated than men. They come to be amused, and they fall readily into the spirit of mirth. I love to play to children, and often try my gags and my business on my own children. If they are pleased I am pretty sure to make good with the first matinee audience we have. And I always try my make-up on my own youngsters."

VEST-POCKET DINNERS.

It is said that a German student of food concentration has succeeded so well with his experiments that a single small capsule now suffices him for a full meal and that ten seconds is the average time he spends at either his breakfast, luncheon or dinner. The prediction is freely made that within a few years we shall all be subsisting upon capsules, there will be no more cooking in our households and the servant problem will be solved most beautifully. Of course under these conditions there would be no more public dinners or banquets of state, our caterers would be thrown out of employment, and the great hotels would become simply dormitories. We would buy our meals at the drug stores and carry them in our pockets. The sign "Quick Lunch" would disappear from our streets, for we would all be walking restaurants.

Whatever the possibility of such a condition from the scientific standpoint, there is not the slightest danger of its realization within the lifetime of the present generation. Most of us, to be frank, are too fond of eating and drinking to be content with capsule repasts, however convenient as time savers. The element of sociability, too, must be taken into consideration. The gathering of a family about the table three times a day adds immeasurably to human enjoyment. It is the place of all places where good cheer should prevail. There are sufficient influences at work for the destruction of home life in these busy days without adding one more. We fear the food capsule will be a long time achieving the popularity at present enjoyed by beefsteak and potatoes.—[Robert Webster Jones, in the May Housekeeper.

"Why, Harold," protested the mother, "didn't I tell you to allow brother to choose the piece he wanted?"

"That's what I did," assented the child. "I told him to either take the little piece or go without, and he chose the little piece."—[Denver Republican.

OUR POPULATION.

AN ANALYSIS OF ITS ELEMENTS AS IT IS AT THE PRESENT.

[New York Sun:] The 438 cities of the United States containing 10,000 and more inhabitants increased in population from 1900 to 1903, according to the estimate of the Census Bureau, from 24,047,364 to 25,806,987, or a gain of 1,759,620, or 7.3 per cent.

Of this increase, nearly a sixth was in the city of New York alone, and if the whole metropolitan area is included nearly one-quarter. The total population of Buffalo, the eighth city of the Union in size, is not greater than the mere increase in population in this metropolitan area since 1900.

Only six States in the Union, the State of New York not counted, of course, have a population greater than that of the municipality of New York—Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Texas, Missouri and Massachusetts. If the population of the whole of our metropolitan area is included, there are only three—Pennsylvania, Illinois and Ohio. If the concentration about the waters of New York and in the district directly tributary to it shall continue it is probable that the next census will show in it a population which will be exceeded only by that of the States of Pennsylvania and Illinois.

In this New York metropolitan area there are more Germans and Irishmen, foreign-born and their children, than the entire population of any other city of the Union except Chicago. There are more Jews than the entire population of any other of our cities except Chicago and Philadelphia. There are more Italians than the whole population of any others except St. Louis, Boston, Baltimore and Cleveland, in addition to the two named, and more than in any city of Italy itself, except Naples, for at present the Italian inhabitants of New York number about as many as the population of Rome. If the Italian immigration shall continue at the rate of the last four years, not even Naples will contain as many as New four years, not even Naples will contain as many as New Jewish immigration continues at its present volume, there will be a million inhabitants of that race in New York, and of the cities of the world only about a dozen will have a greater total population. The Jews will be the largest single race element in New York, and already they number nearly as many as were the number of white natives born of native parents here in 1900.

Turning from consideration of the urban population of the United States particularly, it is suggestive to note that of the total estimated population of the Union in 1903, the three Northern States of New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois contain together nearly as many inhabitants as are in all the eleven States of the old Southern Confederacy. In the city of New York alone, counting the whole metropolitan area of which it is center, the population is equal to one-quarter of that whole Southern population.

Of the population of the whole Union, nearly two-thirds are in the States and Territories of the North, counting with the South all the border and old slave States.

THE RADIUM COCKTAIL.

There are many reasons for the belief that the radium cocktail will never become a popular drink.

In the first place, the cost of the chief ingredient, which is about $3,000,000 a pound, places it beyond the reach of the average individual with the cocktail habit, and many of those who can afford it are suffering with affections of the pneumo-gastric nerve or pancreatic afflictions which restrict them to malted milk and like predigested beverages.

Even if the price of the radium cocktail should be reduced to the universal standard of value, two for a quarter, it could never fill a popular place in the affections of the interior of the public, because the method of compounding it, which consists of dropping a scarcely visible speck of radium into a glassful of water, appeals neither to the imagination nor the palate and creates no anticipatory delight on the part of the imbiber.

Besides, the proportions of the ingredients will be considered out of all reason. No "connoisseur" of cocktails will give his approval to any decoction containing that much water.

Only in the suggestion that it is a sovereign specific for snake bites does the radium cocktail awaken a responsive thrill in the breasts of the multitudes that live in dread of the venomous poison of reptiles, especially in the fishing season, but even under such circumstances no decoction seems to offer any advantages over the "straight" remedies so long and so generally relied upon.

Despite the indorsement of science, it is probable that the bibulous will continue to make libations at the shrine of Bacchus instead of at the fountain of the Curies, and that with the disciples of Izaak Walton, beset as they will continue to be by reptilian dangers, nothing will ever take the place of the "Old Jordan" of the South or the tanglefoot of the West.—[Chicago Chronicle.

HARDY VINES.

THE RIGHT USE OF THE VINE IN THE GARDEN.

PLANTING NOTE.

By exercising care, many hardy vines and shrubs may be transplanted at this season.

Hardy Climbers.

"AMONG the links between man's mind and nature we may place, as one of the most obvious, man's earliest attempt to select and group from her scattered varieties of form that which—at once a poem and a picture—forms, as it were, the decorated border-land between man's home and nature's measureless domains, the garden."—[Bulwer.

It is Samuel Parsons, Jr., who in his clever little book upon planning home grounds distinguishes between the vines that contribute to the natural and picturesque in the garden and those vines which are civilized and conventional in their habits and tend to dignify the surroundings. Somehow we associate certain vines with certain conditions. Rightly or not we consign the dense evergreen growth and the somewhat indifferent character of the bloom of Dolichos, the Australian pea, to covering up the shabbiness of rear yards, back fences, shabby buildings and outhouses, while the rampant nasturtiums with all their vividness of color, their sweetness of perfume, and their faculty for giving a crisp young look to the premises are very apt to find themselves close neighbors to the cabbages, and cauliflowers, and other kitchen garden and "hidden corner" adjuncts of our domains.

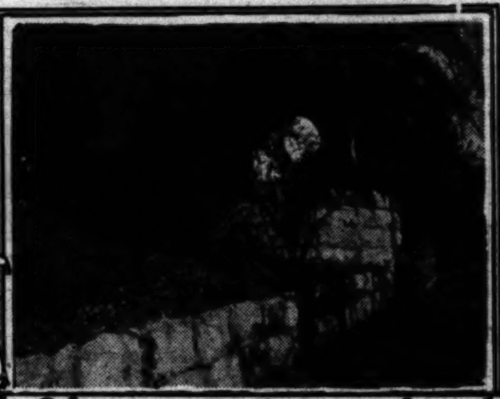
Residence Mrs. R. Y. Haynes Montecito



A Picturesque Wall No. 1 Crocker Row, Santa Barbara

Personally, I hope some day to be possessed of a garden where there shall be not even a suggestion of a "back yard." It is the fault of the city, and of the manner of men's crude planning, that gives us back yards, anyway. I can remember as a child shuddering at the sight of the ugly rear fences which had encroached even upon the sacred precincts of "Nob Hill," in San Francisco, and upon which I could look down from my playroom window; and I then and there resolved that when I grew up and became very, very rich, I should go a long way off from the noisy, crowded, ill-smelling city and should build me a lovely residence with four fronts, and no "back doors," and that it should be surrounded with a great garden that went all the way around—and with no garbage barrels in sight. I haven't found the Land of Heart's Desire yet, nor have I been able to get away from other people's great board fences, but I have learned a secret, while on the way, that is helping me to cover them up. The ugliest sight in the vicinity of your outlook may be cut off from view by the proper planting of some hardy vine, and the English idea of leafy screens to shut in, or cut out, sights that do not lend to pleasure is an idea worth preserving and enlarging upon.

Now there are corners in the garden, and summer-houses and necessary barns and outbuildings that one may like to conceal with a wild tangle of intertwining picturesque masses of leafy branches and twining tendrils, but there are other places where we desire neater, quieter effects. One of our photographs this week is of the entrance steps to the beautiful home of Mrs. R. Y. Haynes at Montecito, and which is a beautiful example of the application of the Old Mission architecture to a private residence. The wall concealing the steps as well as the lower wall of the house are made to rest the eye from the severe simplicity of the smooth walls, by the use of English ivy and the Ampelopsis, both of which have a way of covering a flat surface of stone or plaster in a manner that almost resembles the overlapping of shingles, one leaf resting flat upon another in what Mr. Parsons would call a "dignified and civilized" manner. There are other features of the Haynes place that are worthy of attention, the use of olive trees upon the lawn with seats beneath for the weary. It would be a sordid soul, indeed, that could not find an indescribable refreshment of the soul while resting under one of these fine old silvery olive trees, which, since the creation, have brought to generation after generation the message of peace.

I am not so sure that I like the contrast between the civilization of the English ivy hanging over the balustrade and the magnificent prickly pear or Opuntia (cactus) that stands guarding the right entrance, but considering the relation of the cactus to the period in which the style of architecture took birth, I think the Opuntia has been chosen wisely, and the effect of the whole is as artistic as any arrangement I have found in the dooryard of a modernized "Mission" residence.

A List of Hardy Climbers.

There are hardy annuals and hardy perennials, and it is of the latter that I wish to write particularly this week. In Southern California, once planted, these need scarcely ever be renewed, and by using care in the original planting, one may really plant for all time. There are then, first, for use in covering brick, stone, plaster or even frame houses, the very interesting varieties of bignonia. There is, first, the Bignonia Tweediana, which will cling fast and flat to stone or wood alike. It has a bright green foliage, and at least twice a year bright golden yellow flowers. It is especially useful on tall buildings and may be kept clear at the ground, covering only the upper part of the building and festooning in graceful lines towers, or chimneys, or ramparts of one sort or another.

There is another bignonia more properly named Pithecoctenium buccinatorium, which I have seen in but one place, and that on a fine private residence at Santa Barbara owned by E. W. Hadley. This bignonia (Bignonia cherere, for short,) is the most vigorous grower I have ever seen of the vine kind. It has glorious great clusters of trumpet-shaped crimson flowers which, if my memory serves me, have yellow throats. Bignonia cherere would be worthy of extreme effort to secure.

Bignonia venusta is a very desirable hardy resident of the garden, and makes a flame of orange color on the roof tops from September to April. Another bignonia-like plant is Pithecoctenium muricatum, with rather woolly flowers in white and pale yellow. Where orange and yellow are to be avoided there is a rich purple-flowered bignonia which blooms in panicles, Bignonia Lindleyi, which blooms young. The Amelopses have already been referred to, and Amelopsis Vetchii affords much pleasure in the fall, with its delightful red and copper hues, the leaves being very brilliant just before they fall even where Jack Frost never appears. Amelopsis quinquefolia is the well-known Virginia creeper, and also has a fine red foliage in the fall. Ampelopsis tricuspidata is the Japanese "Boston ivy." It has fine bronze shades in summer, but is entirely deciduous through the winter months.

The Bougainvilleas are becoming so well known that they scarcely need further introduction, yet probably there are no hardy vines in our gardens that are more misused than these same Bougainvilleas. In the first place, they must be very carefully considered in the color scheme of the whole. A misplaced Bougainvillea spectabilis, or B. glabra can absolutely overshadow every other bloom in the garden, and make one sigh for the absence of color. The red variety (Bougainvillea lateritia) is much more easily placed in relation to other colors, but unfortunately it is not nearly so hardy, and is difficult to procure true to description.

There are many varieties of Bougainvillea which are grown in the European countries as "stove plants" that will doubtless be brought to bear our out-of-doors conditions in time, and will be very valuable additions to our list, but in the meantime let me beg of all amateur gardeners to "think twice, and then twice again" before they plant any variety of Bougainvillea, lest their last condition shall be worse than their first.

Now there are not nearly enough clematis vines used in Southern California, or jasmines, either. The jasmines are all graceful and will climb well with but a little encouragement. Jasminum gracilis is a very sweet-scented white variety, and Jasminum fruticans is the pretty soft yellow so frequently found in the Southern States. Of the clematis there are almost innumerable varieties and in every hue of the rainbow. Many of the varieties grown on this Coast come direct from China and Japan. A very hardy white-starred variety comes, however, from Himalaya, the Clematis Montana grandiflora, and a very welcome alien it is. Clematis campaniflora is, as its name indicates, a bell-shaped bloom, and in color a light blue. This variety is Portuguese. Clematis crispa is a great favorite, being a lovely violet in shade, while Clematis coccinea is a scarlet Texan that will be prized. One can hardly choose wrong in selecting clematis, as it is invariably beautiful and hardy in this climate, unless there may be certain varieties that prefer the shady side of the house.

It is just as well to note in this connection that a matter of a little more sun or a little more shade will often affect a vine in its infancy that will after it once makes a start, seem to have no effect upon it. Just so regarding wind. The clematis seems to resent having its pretty skirts disarranged, while the Tecomas with trumpet-shaped flowers do not mind a hurricane because they are so "well-reefed."

Vines that Bear Sweet-scented Flowers.

Now, while one is planting, one may as well consider the matter of "perfume in the air." Of course there are always the climbing roses—dozens of varieties nowadays, and new ones constantly being added to the list. But there are other sweet-scented blooms besides, and I wish to urge especially the claims of the honeysuckle. Whenever I make plans for the castle in the Land of Heart's Desire the honeysuckles go down first on the list, because I have tested them thoroughly, and there is nothing that will take their place. Lonicera is the family name of the honeysuckles, and Lonicera caprifolium is the sweetest of them all, and is the typical sort, with large white and yellow blossoms. The books say it is deciduous, but my Southern California experience is that it must make all its changes in the night, for mine is practically evergreen and everblooming. It will grow anywhere. The pretty red Lonicera fuchsioides is another ever-blooming variety, but it is scentless. Lonicera semperflorens is another scarlet variety which blooms profusely all summer long. A beautiful Chinese variety is Lonicera Standishii, with dark green foliage and lovely pink and white bloom. A Japanese variety that gives pleasure with its prettily mottled foliage is Japonica aurea reticulata. Lonicera flava is a [illegible] vine with large yellow blossoms. One cannot make a mistake in having a number of varieties of honeysuckle.

The jasmines come under this list as well. Now [illegible]devillea suavolens is another very fragrant deciduous vine with a fine large funnel-shaped white flower. [illegible]renia odorata is a splendid vine with a distinct foliage and very fragrant white bloom. The Passifloras of many varieties and numerous shades of color are most of them possessed of pleasant fragrance. The plumbagos have a very delicate fragrance, hardly perceptible to some. Plumbago capensis is a beautiful sky-blue in the flower, while P. capensis alba is the same in pure white. Plumbago rosea is a glorious rose-colored variety not frequently grown—why, I know not. Thunbergias are heavy-sounding, but they are really graceful members of the climbing class.

Then of the annuals there are so many sweet-scented, the morning glories, the sweet peas, and last but not least, the much abused nasturtium. I prophesy that some day the nasturtium will be made a "fashionable" flower. It is sweet-scented, a remarkable climber in some varieties, and has colors that make it valuable in lighting up dark corners. Truly no garden is complete without many varieties of nasturtiums, and that they are sweet is attested by birds and bees as well as flower-loving girls.

A Notable Corner in Santa Barbara.

"The only possible house in a row is the corner one." The phrase came ringing back to my ears out of years long gone when I had gone "home-hunting" (house-hunting was not a term that meant anything to such garden lovers as we were) with my mother. I had passed down Crocker Row, in Santa Barbara, several times this spring in returning from country drives, but this was the first time I had driven up the street and gotten the charming impression of the approach to the first house. "No. 1 Crocker Row," the residence of W. J. Willitts. Quite one of the prettiest places in "the [illegible] of pretty places" is this home of Mr. Willitts, and every one who visits the Old Mission may pass it coming or going. The stone wall of the garden is attractive, and I only regret that my photograph was taken before the nasturtiums had gotten their growth. I fancy that a small-leaved ficus should decorate this wall, but it is pretty, anyway, with the great palms overhanging [illegible] walk and the bits of bright crisp nasturtiums resting against the stones which, being the Santa Barbara stone, have the sunshine caught in them, which glints even here in the shadow.

It's a pretty corner—a home-like place of abode—this No. 1 Crocker Row.

GUNNING IN PANAMA.

The sportsman who sighs for the pond that has never been fished, and the nook of woods that has never been hunted, should pack his outfit and go to the table lands that lie along the southern slope of the cordilleras in the new republic of the Isthmus of Panama.

For the hardy sportsman—one who would equal Roosevelt's work among the panthers and other cats in Colorado—the stalking of the jaguar is the real sport. For the panther is a kitten beside the jaguar. The natives there call the panther the "friend of man," as those of the Argentine do, but they call the jaguar a devil. The natives hunt the jaguar by putting out bait and lying in wait for him on some elevated hiding place. I saw a man who had killed a jaguar thus with bow and arrow. For stalking a jaguar in man fashion, the best place is on a sandy stretch of sea beach, and the time when most likely to find the game is on a moonlight night. For the jaguars are as partial to the sea beach on a moonlight night as more or less civilized cats are to back fences of the city. They can be found in the uplands, however, with no great difficulty, and it is safe to say that wherever found they are not to be considered lightly. They have not learned to fear man on the isthmus as they in most of the other parts of the world where and they do not hesitate to charge when they there is any occasion for it, and even without oc- A moonlight hunt for the jaguar may be called sport the new republic affords.—[Illustrated News.

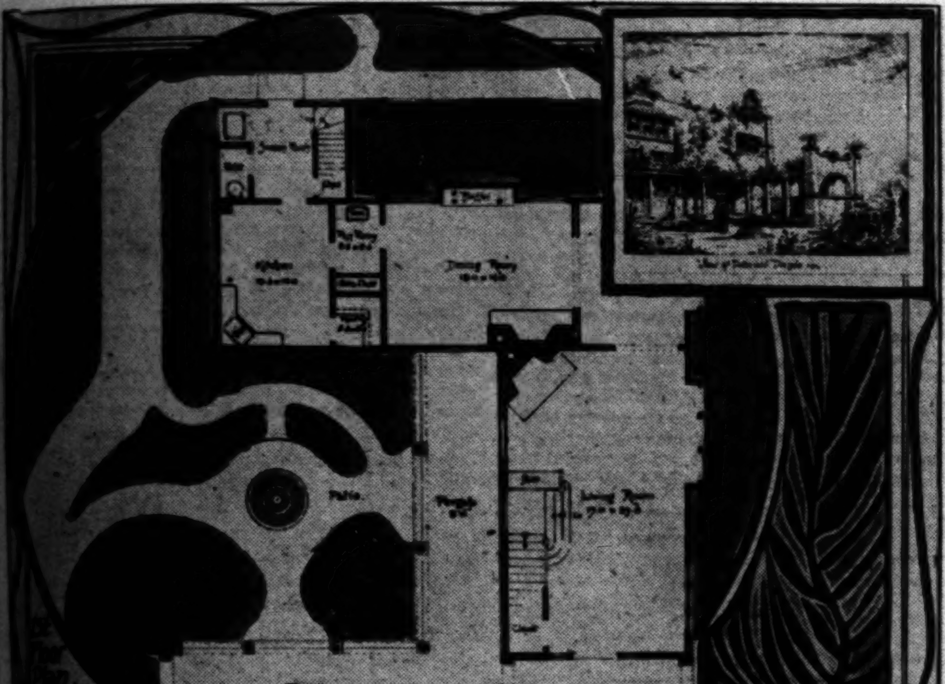
ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN OF A NEW HOME IN LOS ANGELES.

By a Los Angeles Architect.

THAT the present home-building public of this particular part of the world is beginning to more fully appreciate the wisdom of their earlier predecessors in this land of perfect climate is well instanced by the steadily-increasing demand for the type of home illustrated by the accompanying sketches. They represent a cement plastered residence now in course of construction on Grammercy Place, near Dorchester street, this city, for Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Perkins.

The most striking feature of this design is the partially inclosed court, or garden, with its arched and vine-covered pergola, walks, fountain and shrubbery, where one may fully enjoy the delights of open air and sunshine coupled with almost perfect privacy.

The principal room of the house is the large low-ceiled living room, from which convenient access to the garden is obtained by large French windows reaching to the floor. The finish of this room is of slash-grained pine stained dark, with polished floor of red birch, high-paneled wainscot, and heavily beamed ceiling. The liberal fireplace and mantel are built of rough hewn sandstone, in keeping with the rather severe and massive effect of the general finish and furnishings designed for this apartment. Opening from the living room is a small but cosy "den," also finished in dark wood, while the dining-room adjoining will be finished in ivory-white enamel with old blue walls. The fireplace will be formed entirely of dull cream tinted tiles with brass trimmings. The built-in- buffét is low and broad, with a wide casement window above. The lower wall of this room will be wainscoted with a dull blue art burlap with wooden plate rail.



RESIDENCE OF E. T. PERKINS.

The kitchen and servants' department, with rear and cellar stairways, while made as convenient as possible, are so arranged as to be quite separated from the rest of the house.

On the second story, which is reached by a broad easy stairway from the living room below, are to be found a large boudoir, at the front of the house, four bed chambers and a bathroom, all finished in white enameled woodwork with light tinted walls. Owing to the flat roof of this design there is no attic, but the space between ceiling and roof joists is ample and well ventilated to insure a perfect circulation of air sufficient to prevent the bed chambers from becoming too warm in summer, while the loss of an attic for storage purposes is amply made up by an unusual number of large closets, presses and cupboards.

The building will be heated by a hot air furnace in addition to the several open fireplaces on both stories.

The lighting will be effected by both gas and electricity, and all gas, electric and plumbing fixtures will be of the best quality and most recent patterns, making in all a very complete and comfortable home of a most reasonable and attractive design for this climate, at a cost of something less than $7500.

A not unimportant feature of the house is a small rear balcony reached from the upper hall, from which by an outside stairway access may easily be had to the flat roof, which with its cement parapet walls could be made into a most delightful roof garden.

ORIENTAL REMEDIES.

R. L. Jones of Ontario, Canada, was at the Willard Hotel last night, and to a reporter for the Herald he told of some of his experiences while traveling on a recent trip in India.

"I was sick a few days after I arrived in India, and I immediately applied for medical assistance. It chanced that no civilized physician was to be had in the neighborhood, so I called for a native doctor.

"An American friend was traveling with me, but who was familiar with the customs of the country, said: 'Very well, I'll take you to a doctor.'

"He then took me a few hundred yards from the hut where we were at the time, and then when I saw the 'native doctor' administering some of his medicines I at once lost all signs of illness and felt as fine as a two-year-old.

"One of their favorite ways of treating in India is to raise blisters all over the body. This is accomplished by the application of a red-hot iron. The blister is then dressed with cayenne pepper.

"'Gunpowder pills' also are a favorite medicine in that part of the world. Twelve of them are given for a dose. A minute later a coal applied to a slow match leading down the throat is inserted. A movement among the particles then takes place, which either eradicates the disease or the patient—most commonly the latter."

Mr. Jones stands sponsor for all this, and vouches for its verity.—[Louisville Herald.

DECLINE OF THE GRACEFUL COURTESY.

"There never was a time when people were more lacking in grace," said a dancing master.

"A hostess nowadays," he added, "crowds her drawing-room or billiard-room with a large number of 'undesirables'—that is, people with no pretence to what is vulgarly called a stylish manner. But at one time a hostess paid as much attention to her guests' accomplishments in deportment as to their character before inviting them to her house.

"At a private dance, how seldom one sees a girl make a graceful courtesy to her partner! Usually she does no more than nod in a way that looks shockingly familiar. As for the men—well, a quarter of a century ago one saw more masculine grace at a clerks' or shop assistants' 'cinderella' than our best bred men are capable of today! But, after the example of the girls, who can wonder at it?"—[Chicago Tribune.

MARRIED A COUPLE IN TWO LANGUAGES.

Because the bride could not understand English and the groom could not understand German, County Judge G. W. Murray of Springfield, Ill., found it necessary the other day to perform a wedding in the two languages.

The couple gave their names as Louis Maudra and Miss Wylte Wetti, the former 26 and the latter 19 years of age. The ceremony was first said in English, the groom giving the responses, and then in German, to which the bride made replies.—[Detroit Tribune.

CHERRY BLOSSOMS GIFTS.

A MANDARIN'S COAT AND PRETTY GARMENTS FROM JAPAN.

By a Special Contributor.

WE think we know a thing or two here in America as regards the proper garb for woman, and we have even impressed the foreign nations with this same idea of ours, so much so that picturesque Japan, with flowing robes and pretty sweeping garments, has laid aside this effective dress and has adopted the American gown for the official court dress of Japan.

Now, the American girl is not above learning a thing or two herself, and so she has borrowed many things of late from Miss Cherry Blossom of Japan, and so becoming and artistic does she find them that Japanese garments are becoming a rage, and we are even taking unto ourselves the sprawling dragon embroideries of China, and transferring them to our gowns, and the very latest fad of the up-to-date girl is the coat of some nodding mandarin to wear for an opera wrap.

One of the most charming girls of our younger set in Los Angeles has kindly allowed us to picture her particular treasure of an opera wrap, this week, and I can assure you when this particular girl wears it, it is immediately invested with a wondrous grace and makes one long for the immediate possession of some other mandarin's coat. I am very certain that no mandarin, with long finger nails, ever looked so pleasing in his coat as our American girl does, and she finds favor in the eyes of American men, too, as was evinced by a most expressive remark made by a man to the girl with a coat like this one: "What was that you had on the other evening, Miss Blank?" said he. "I told my wife you came in looking like a dream in some stunning, floppy-looking thing, but she couldn't tell what it was." Of course a "stunning, floppy-looking thing" cannot be regarded as a lucid description of a mandarin's coat, but it voiced his admiration for the tout ensemble, at any rate.

The coat worn by the pretty girl in the picture on this page is made of a beautiful dark blue, almost purple, satin, a color that we do not see in America. It is banded on the edges with the richest embroidery, with blossoms of lighter blue on a white ground, and is lined with a thin light blue silk. Around the kimono-like sleeves is a band of saffron satin with the same flowers edging it. The coat has a history, as it was brought here from China and had really been used by one of those curious slant-eyed rulers, but it is silent in regard to the wonderful things it has seen and only a riotous fancy can tell the story of the former owner.

The kimono has long been worn by the American maid and matron, but now it is frequently used for real state and festival occasions when a Japanese afternoon has been planned and with rice-powdered face and low sweet voice the hostess welcomes her kimono-clad friends and serves tea to them, giving them some quaint Japanese appellation, such as Miyo-San, which means white lilac, or Miss Wisteria, when her kimono is like the stunning embroidered one which we have pictured this week, with the purple wisteria and the gorgeous pink lilies which grow by the sedges in the tea gardens in Japan. See the sleeves of this wisteria maiden. Are they not suggestive of the many little things which a Japanese girl is said to carry in them? And from the way they are fashioned we readily see how easy it is for her to tuck away her fan—that fascinating weapon of the slant-eyed coquette—her money or anything, in fact, which an American puts into her shopping bag, and how convenient for tucking away a surreptitious note, or a telltale flower, for I believe flowers are used to tell the tale of love in Japan.

This handsome kimono which the American has donned for the afternoon has a background of heavy bronze satin and a lining of soft pink which peeps out like the inner part of a seashell. Over the shoulders and down the front, in rich and beautiful clusters of purple bloom, trails the wisteria with delicate leaves of contrasting green, and at the foot of the garment are the exquisite lilies. A scarf with the purple wisteria embroidery and fringed ends completes the costume, which has quaint lapels turning out in front of saffron satin.

The Japanese fan has not yet become as thoroughly Americanized as it will be later on, for the simple reason that the American girl must take lessons in the infinite coquetry of handling it. But the charm of the Japanese fan in the hands of an expert is too great to escape American adoption, and we may hear any day of some enterprising Japanese maiden opening a school for the training of our girls in this pretty art, just as they are trained themselves in Japan. Or some American girl may go to the plucky little island and learn, so as to teach her sisters at home.

The Japanese parasol is nearly as effective as the fan, and in the Land of Sunshine it is also practical and unique, and Dame Fashion will surely sanction anything as picturesque as the way the girl in the picture holds this airy paper trifle.

Miss America early began to borrow the beautiful Japanese house furnishings from Miss Cherry Blossom, and there is a certain reception room in the World's Fair City that is furnished entirely with the articles of a paper house in Japan which an American girl coveted and bought and brought across the Pacific Ocean for the love which she bore their artistic effects. Their screens are especially beautiful, and like all of their painstaking work, the one which is a pretty background for Miss Chrysanthemum as she pours her tea in the picture is made of heavy black satin and is hand embroidered in delicate pink cherry blossoms, the color effect being simply exquisite and decidedly striking.

Miss Chrysanthemum with her brilliant kimono of white silk bordered with red and covered with gorgeous red chrysanthemums, is sitting beside a low tea table, striking the dragon gong, which has tones as sweet as a nightingale's throat. I have heard a secret anent this sweet-sounding gong. At the wedding of one of the prettiest and dearest of Los Angeles girls, which is to take place in May, this gong is to give forth its bell-like notes during the ceremony.

The low tea table to which Miss Chrysanthemum is leaning is connected with the religious ideas of Japan, for it is carved from that most sacred wood, the Cryptomerias, which is regarded as sacred to the gods.

The tree from which this wood is obtained grows high up on lonely mountain places and holds itself aloof from all other vegetation in exclusive groves, so that the people of Japan say that the gods have reserved this wood for themselves. The altars of their gods are carved from this hard, dark green wood, which can be carved so easily without splitting, and so reverent are they of it that no nail is driven through it, but it is all carefully dovetailed together in the painstaking Eastern manner.

The great porcelain jar which looks so much like the Cloisonne is the old, old Inaci ornamented with the grotesque Japanese figures so strangely and artistically intermingled, and this exquisitely shaped jar is a great price, for one must pay for the beautiful and the ancient even if it is from the East, where people are plentiful and labor is so cheap. Cobalt blue and dragon's blood red are the suggestive colors employed.

Besides the other ideas which we have borrowed from this little island across the sea is the combing jacket which we have shown in the picture, and though of American make, the kimono shape is distinctly Japanese. It is cleverly made, and is the idea of someone in Los Angeles who fashioned them for one of the prominent department stores, but they are so pretty and effective their fame has traveled to New York, several samples being sent there. Five large bandanas of Japanese design are required for the making, one for the back with a point in the middle of the back, one for the front which is cut straight down the middle and used in two pieces, though in the same way that the back is used. A handkerchief is cleverly sewed together to form a sleeve, and still another is cut out to form a sailor collar. The fetching garment is then tied together in front with ribbons. The wonder of this little garment lies in the way it is put together, which must have required a genius to plan in the first place. Red or blue are the colors used in the combing jackets which are shown in the shop which originated them, but that is because the large bandanas required for making this particular style can be found in these two colors only.

Truly the little Japs are converting us to their art as we are converting them to our religion.

LINGERIE SUGGESTIONS.

COSTLY AND BEAUTIFUL UNDERGARMENTS AND HOW THEY MAY BE SIMULATED.

By a Special Contributor.

The girls of Pasadena's smart set—and some others—were all a-quiver with excitement recently over the astonishingly elaborate wedding outfit of one of their number, glimpses of which were accorded a favored few.

It was certainly a trousseau fit for a Princess, and while the gowns were both numerous and costly it was the lingerie which perhaps made the greatest impression. This alone was said to have cost $1000, but girls who have not one-tenth of this sum to spend upon all the pretty unseen things which women wear may find some useful suggestions in this exquisite wardrobe.

Every up-to-date girl knows that the lingerie which is shown in the shops—costly and beautiful as it is—falls as far short of what the maiden who can gratify every wish desires, as the "ready-made" gown fails to hold its own with that which is especially designed for its wearer. For this reason a bride, whether she has much or little to spend, rarely contents herself with bargain-counter clothes. If she can afford it, she has her "things" made by someone who makes a specialty of women's underwear or sends to a convent all her dainty materials for the nuns, who do the finest kind of needlework, to make up. But if she must economize she makes these garments herself, and it is the prettiest kind of sewing for the girl who is skillful.

Some such girls will be grateful for a side peep at an outfit which brings to light many a new conceit and novelty in trimming.

In spite of the richness of the lace which trimmed the gossamer articles, in spite of the delicate textures, the exquisite hand embroideries, the first thought in regard to this royal outfit was not "how expensive, how splendid," but "how simple and dainty." In the modern under-garment the chief requisite is delicacy; a fineness of everything which has always pertained to the wardrobe of the well-clad infant. This can be achieved with inexpensive as well as costly materials. The most sheer of lawns or muslins must be used and every stitch put in by hand. Hems are hemstitched in the good old-fashioned way, and many an effective bit of insertion is nothing but fancy fagoting of the muslin of the garment.

It is all this hand stitching which costs money and which the daughter of a millionaire expects to pay for, but any industrious maid who is sensible contented with few of these not very ments and some more useful ones can have a "sets" of pretty things with comparatively pense and without injuring her eyesight or

In the matter of robes de nuit there is some to over-trimming, but in the pretty chemises with their long skirts, are again the vogue, rules as well as in the wide pantalets which almost umbrella-like in fullness. The chemise it unnecessary to have many corset covers, are extremely ornate, being beautified with drawn and lace incertion. Medallions of lace inserted skirt of the chemise and in the front of the corset make a particularly effective trimming with less than bands of insertion, and as these bits of going out of fashion for gowns, really choice be obtained for a song.

In the trousseau referred to the sleeves of the for night wear showed some new designs, being shape, set in plain at the shoulder, spreading almost enormous width at the wrist. This voluminousness was made possible by the introduction of V- pieces, tucked on the bias and joined to the with insertion. The sleeves were one solid mass sertion and tucks, and the wide collar, falling the shoulders, was of the same. These night cut very much in the fashion known as "sacque" years ago, and were suggestive of an old fashion

Even the petticoats of the modern girl are soft and clinging, showing no suspicion of the rustling skirt once considered "the thing" and of the laundress. They also are made of flimsy and trimmed with soft muslin embroideries of laces. As they have proved about the most able garment imaginable to walk in, some clever has discovered a palliating flounce to make durable. This flounce is adjustable and is made (white, of course,) just the width of the on the petticoat. The taffeta ruffle is neatly under the one of muslin and gives some body whole garment. It can be removed when the to the laundry, and one ruffle can really be one's petticoats made in this fashion. This is really a straight ruffle about six inches with a bias addition, pinked upon the edge, equal depth. It furnishes an amount of frou-frou the ankles hardly suspected.

One of the absolutely necessary marks of an date outfit is the neatly embroidered monogram must appear upon every article. These are worked in white and in facsimile design through whole trousseau as one uses one book plate his entire library. When the monogram the front of the chemise or corset cover with of lilies of the valley or orange blossoms it makes a very charming bit of ornamentation gives a distinctive character to the garment, how simply it may be trimmed. A pretty tinguishing one set of Valenciennes trimmed was a fern leaf (in white) embroidered carelessly in some conspicuous spot, upon each article. One most fascinating designs was a conventional butterflies, wing touching wing, extending as around the shoulders of a chemise and scattered tering groups upon other garments.

"Mine understands everything I say to him." "So does said the visitor, complacently; "in fact, my I have learned French, so we can converse dog understanding us."—[Philadelphia Ledger.

FIELD NOTES.

J. W. Jeffrey, Agricultural Editor

Improved Grapes.

NO phase of vine growing has been more prominent for years than the introduction of the latest and best varieties of table grapes. Southern California has several gentlemen of means who are scouring the country for cuttings and rooted vines of these desirable varieties. Stimulated by the cessation of the deadly so-called Anaheim disease, our vineyardists are getting courage, not only toward the planting of immense vineyards for wine making, but to the planting of fine table kinds, some of which plantations may prove of commercial importance in supplying distant markets. Even some of the famous wild varieties have been imported from Georgia, which, should they succeed here, will add another distinctive fruit to the catalogue of rare products of Southern California.

Mammoth Delphinium.

J. REICH of Winfield street has sent me a stalk of larkspur which he has grown to the height of nearly six feet, the flowers showing a beautiful blue shading into purple. These graceful annuals form a fine center group for a circular bed filled out with shorter-growing plants of other kinds, or for a solid bed using the more dwarfish delphinium for the outer circles. The larkspur has long since outgrown its disinfectant use by the pioneers, when the mothers of the previous generation mixed its petals with "red precipitate" and rubbed the mixture in their children's hair to prevent scratching. Larkspur is now recognized as one of the most beautiful of plants for lawn effects, and with the old-fashioned geranium and verbena may be found abundantly in the best yards.

Averages Improving.

A LETTER from a member of the Pasadena Orange Growers' Association states that from the later returns received by his organization the average per box for the season will not fall far below that of last season. As the season advances a better feeling will be found among the growers, especially those who did not send out the bulk of their fruit in February and March. Another association did better than 50 cents a box with the three grades up to the first of April, and later shipments will bring the average up to a much higher figure. When the Valencia crop is added it will be found that the season has not proved as disastrous as it is popularly believed to be.

Predominance of Culls.

ENOUGH has been said in these columns lately to set the growers of oranges thinking. Occasionally, however, a rancher sends in new cases corroborating the facts heretofore set out concerning the immoderate or improper use of fertilizers as a cause of deteriorating fruit. One grower in Los Angeles county about the middle of last month hauled 1600 field boxes of navel oranges to his packing-house. Out of this number he was compelled to haul away over 1100 boxes of culls. He had fertilized very heavily with stable manure. A neighbor delivered 2200 field boxes to the same house out of which only 24 boxes of culls were taken. The latter grower had not used stable manures. This seems to be the difference between success and failure in growing oranges in a certain class of soil.

Walnut Growers Contract.

AT the late meeting of the Walnut Growers' Association held in Los Angeles the growers contracted with the Gulf Bag Company of San Francisco for 100,000 walnut bags. This is evidence of the faith the ranchers have in a heavy crop this season, justified further by reports that the blight is not showing up this year in alarming degree. The nuts are setting an average crop, and are not dropping seriously, showing that the weather conditions have not prevented pollination. This is one crop that does not seem in danger of overproduction, and if the blight holds off this year the business of walnut-growing will be immediately restored and walnut land values resume their normal condition. There is some indication of blight already, but the probabilities are that it will not prove destructive. Another week or so will tell the story.

Alfalfa Needs Fertilizing.

FOR years trainloads of flat cars, bearing thousands of tons of stable and corral manures have been leaving the dairy sections of Los Angeles county for the centers of citrus fruit growing. It is stated that the alfalfa farmers have seen the error of selling or giving away these fertilizers, and will hereafter use a large portion of them upon their home fields. This is wise for two reasons. The home lands should not be depleted, nor the orange groves surfeited with these raw manures. It is hard to determine which has been the greatest sufferers from this habit of transferring such an inordinate quantity of fertilizers, the farmers who sold it or the fruit growers who bought it. At any rate the demand will be light the coming season and the determination general to use the manures at home.

Is it Proportional?

WHEN the Secretary of Agriculture called for $500,000 to be used in the attempt to control the cotton-boll weevil, he had little difficulty in getting an appropriation of one-half that amount to be used in experimentation, although the insect had appeared in only one State. This act of Congress has met the approval of everyone, for it is a fact that as the agricultural industries of the country go, so lies the prosperity of the whole. Without criticising or complaining, but stating it as a matter of justice, we can see too great a degree of economy in the meager appropriation of less than 2 per cent. of the cotton appropriation, lately made for the investigation of the orange culture. Figuring upon the relative value of the entire cotton crop of the United States and the orange crop of California, the appropriation for the citrus investigation should have been $20,000. When the Department of Agriculture asked for one-half this amount, to be used by Mr. Powell in his California investigation, the House Committee cut it down to $3000, but by the efforts of the department it was raised to $5500, and that is all the money available for Mr. Powell's great undertaking. There is less difference in the urgency of the two propositions than appears at first view, for if something is not done to increase the carrying qualities of the orange the industry will suffer irreparable injury. But all such propositions should have more liberal assistance from the department maintained for such purposes.

Local Good Roads.

THE Pasadena Board of Trade at its last annual meeting unanimously adopted a resolution pledging its directors to take up the good roads idea as one of its aggressive policies for the coming year. As a rule the smaller cities and the towns of Southern California have been sadly delinquent upon this subject. It has been a common remark that one can tell where the corporate limits of a town begin by the poor quality of the roads within the municipality. This means that the Supervisors, the farmers and their urban friends have been more diligent in constructing good country roads than the trustees of the smaller cities. Commercial rivalry between the towns of one valley has gridironed the communities with graveled and oiled roads by making it possible for the Supervisors to do the work assisted by public contributions. The automobile run to Pomona last week with its $80,000 worth of fine machines would not have been possible had not the Supervisors and the public-spirited citizens along the route begun to cöoperate in the good roads movement nearly a dozen years ago. Where automobiles can chase each other at the rate of twenty or thirty miles an hour the public can see that the roadmaker has been abroad constructing our pikes upon a permanent basis. I understand from the resolutions that Pasadena is to favor a definite policy of rural road building as well as of city construction. It is time our rising cities should at least put their streets in as good condition as are the main rural highways. Under the head of "Good Roads" will be found the Board of Trade of Pasadena's ideas of how these improvements should be made.

Citrus By-products.

THE editorial discussion in the Daily Times concerning the use of oranges and lemons in the manufacture of side products has brought me an inquiry as to the scope of these products. The manufactured products of the lemon are, lemon juice in concentrated form, citric acid, oil of lemon, salted lemon and candied lemon peel. Of the orange, orange flower perfume, essence of orange flower, the essential oils, oil of orange flower, and medicinal products from the "bitter orange." Orange wine is another product that has been tried, on a large scale, in more than one instance in Southern California, but never proved of permanent commercial moment. In answer to a special inquiry as to the formula, or process of turning orange juice into wine I give the following recipe:

"Take one part of orange juice, well strained, one part of water, three pounds of sugar per gallon. Any kind of sugar will do, and the darker the sugar the richer will be the color of the wine. For each ten gallons put up keep about one gallon of the same for refilling the casks during fermentation. Lay the casks on their side, fill full, and leave the bung open. Do not let it become exposed to too much cold. Fill up the casks every day, from the quantity kept out, as the scum is thrown off, and watch closely till the wine passes through the stage of fermentation. This will usually require from ten to twenty days, or longer if the weather is cool, and can be easily determined by the scum ceasing to rise, and the cessation of brisk fermentation. When it arrives at this stage, place the bung in loosely. Watch closely for a few days, and as active fermentation ceases, put the bung in fast. Let it stand two months and rack off carefully into clean casks. If perfectly clear, seal and let it stand six months, when it may be bottled. If not clear, it should be racked off the second time in two months after the first time and sealed for six months before bottling. Be sure your casks are full, for contact with the air will cause the wine to pass into acetic fermentation. This wine continues to improve with age."

Citrus Investigation.

IT appears that the citrus fruit growers are not to grope in the dark, unaided by scientific experts in the solution of the cultural troubles that have beset the industry. In a letter written to J. H. Reed of Riverside by G. H. Powell, the pomologist in charge of fruit storage investigations, the writer outlines the probable points to be considered, as follows: 1. The cultural side, or those questions having to do with the growing of the tree and fruit. 2. The commercial practices in harvesting and marketing the crop. 3. From the standpoint of pests of different kinds. 4. The means of spreading [illegible] the people the information already known [illegible] worked out. In another column will be found [illegible] in full from Mr. Powell as published by Mr. Reed [illegible] Riverside Press.

I do not think it presumptious to say that [illegible] least one point of cultural methods that is already [illegible] onstrated so thoroughly that Mr. Powell need [illegible] much time to that, namely the fact that the [illegible] fertilizers in some of our soils has well-nigh [illegible] orange crops. Concurring in all that Mr. Reed [illegible] a private letter as to the necessity of expert [illegible] tion to determine the cause of puffy or [illegible] fruit, we must insist that the citrus industry [illegible] drifting along culturally under the failure of [illegible] ists, fertilizer experts, practical farmers and [illegible] to forecast the results of too much nitrogenous [illegible] to the citrus trees. We cannot expect the experts [illegible] phasize the overfeeding of orchards half so well [illegible] rience has emphasized its deteriorating [illegible] Pending the investigations of Mr. Powell the [illegible] should do some prompt investigating upon their [illegible] responsibility. In fact, they are doing so at this [illegible] and the results, while not so conclusive as may be [illegible] from the government's officials, may vastly [illegible] next orange crop. When the experts do take [illegible] work they should have the cöoperation of every [illegible] One clause in Mr. Powell's letter indicates that [illegible] take a practical view of the situation, in which [illegible] the industry cannot be helped by attacking the [illegible] as diseases. "Less from delay, puffing and some [illegible] troubles are incidental to cultural and commercial [illegible] ods of handling the fruit," he says. Let him give [illegible] attention to the cultural, for we have vivid [illegible] of the fact that decay in oranges in transit was [illegible] evidence a half dozen years ago when the [illegible] packing and shipping were crude in comparison [illegible] these methods today.

In Brighter Lines.

WHILE the question of the best means of [illegible] ing the citrus fruit crops of California [illegible] its vast importance occupy the center of the [illegible] some time, there are problems of less magnitude [illegible] ually, arising for consideration which altogether [illegible] great moment to the prosperity of the [illegible] Generally speaking, the agricultural prospects of [illegible] nia were never more reassuring. The grain [illegible] promised abundant crops with a percentage of [illegible] gree of excellence at the time of this writing. [illegible] are the fruit prospects good throughout the [illegible] with the exception of the orange crop, there is [illegible] discouragement evident than usual. What the [illegible] the season may bring forth for certain lines of [illegible] ral industries is difficult to forecast before the [illegible] have been exploited or the insects and [illegible] had their sway.

The dairy industry is in good shape, with the [illegible] quantity of feed in sight. Forage crops are [illegible] last year or so bringing quite an addition in [illegible] from the development of the Imperial country. [illegible] the vineyardists have not received lucrative [illegible] their last crop, the vines are in good condition, [illegible] pects for better prices when the vine growers [illegible] more commanding attitude toward the [illegible] ready some progress has been made toward the [illegible] ment of prices. At present the walnut crop is [illegible] shape, and while it is a little too early to predict [illegible] from bacteriosis the growers believe their crop [illegible] cape this season. Among the other favorable [illegible] is the honey business. Bee men are looking for [illegible] crop of honey which will bring in a [illegible] nue from the East. Olive products have [illegible] importance; we may expect a fair crop of [illegible] the celery harvest may bring in as usual a heavy [illegible] for this section. With a heavy exportation of [illegible] usual marketing of cabbage, cauliflower and [illegible] tables during the year there should with all [illegible] average of prosperity throughout this [illegible] State. The manufacturers of by-products are [illegible] their range. Lemon extracts and lemon [illegible] mented grape juice, citron preparations, [illegible] and a dozen other by-products of the citrus [illegible] being prepared, all of which will add in a [illegible] our resources. These developments not only [illegible] revenues, but they bid fair to reach a degree of [illegible] cial importance that will add materially to the [illegible] tive capacity of the State.

THE DAIRY.

Cowpeas on the Dairy Farm.

I HAVE been very successful with [illegible] first I made a good many mistakes. I [illegible] the greatest drawbacks in Missouri is that [illegible] are planted too soon. Plant them along in [illegible] I have come to the conclusion that it is [illegible] plant them until the first of June.

I prepare my ground for cowpeas as I [illegible] corn and about the same time. I have a [illegible] I run over the ground, and I keep the [illegible] until the time comes for planting. After the [illegible] 1901 I had my ground in good condition, and [illegible] peas came up, but in some plots that I [illegible] for that way, the seed failed to come up. [illegible] bors lost many dollars' worth of seed. I [illegible] ground as for corn and have it in fine tilth. [illegible] an abundant crop the dry year. Some [illegible] Whippoorwill cowpea will not climb. I [illegible] with my man and cut them down from the apple trees. They will climb.

As for cowpeas and cane, I have raised cane and know that it impoverishes the land. The soil becomes hard and difficult to pulverize. The cowpea does just the reverse. It is like the soy bean. When you take off a good crop of cowpeas, no extra preparation is necessary for seeding wheat. In the spring, when you prepare the land for cowpeas, you are preparing for the wheat in the fall. Get any kind of cowpeas you like, sow wheat after them, and if you want to experiment you can tell to the very line where you have sowed the cowpeas by the change for the better in the wheat. I tried it three years, and could tell the difference where the cowpeas grew.

Cowpeas are better than clover. There is too much loss in clover in my neighborhood on account of failure to get a stand. We have been using clover for years, and lost every year. I have never lost any cowpea seed nor need one lose any if he prepares the ground right before seed-sowing time. In answer to a question as to whether he ever tried cowpeas after wheat, taking off a crop of wheat and putting the cowpeas in, Mr. Rogers replied: I have after rye, pastured it when it was blooming, and plowed the rye down and sowed cowpeas, then the land is ready for rye in the fall. I like rye better than wheat on account of the chinch bugs in the wheat. Plowing the rye down at that time gets rid of the bugs. I prefer planting the cowpeas in rows, but I like the corn row best, and cultivate them with a five-tooth cultivator. I will tell you how I stack. I have plenty of good straw, but not much barn room. I always stack my straw in my barnyard. I put a good platform of rails and a layer of straw, possibly a foot or 18 inches to the bottom, and so on up, alternating a layer of straw and of cowpeas, and in this way I made three 25-foot ricks close to my cow shed.—[J. Rogers of Missouri, in Orange Judd Farmer.

LIVE STOCK

Selling Yearlings.

THE man who sells the yearling sells grass and growth. He furnished the grass, the yearling harvested it and furnished the growth. The man who finishes the "long two-year-old," grew two crops of corn, harvested it, and fed it to the steer. He sold fat and corn against the grass and growth of the man who sold the yearling. But there must be growers and there must be feeders, and neither can well exist without the other. The small farmer who can grow a few cattle, and a few hogs, and fatten them on the products of his fields, has the best of either the man who grows to sell as feeders, or the man who buys feeders to finish up.

We notice that the disposition among farmers to keep better stock of all kinds grows stronger every year, and in only a few sections of the country do we see the razor-back hog and the "penny rile" bull. It is only a matter of individual opinion as to what is the best breed of hogs or beef cattle and the average farmer will do well to sink his prejudices and breed the same kind his neighbors do of pure stock.

As the writer was making an institute tour with an alfalfa specialist, the latter made this remark: "The man who owns 100 acres of fairly good land, and has ten acres of alfalfa on the farm is a rich man." He went on to say that it was easy to grow corn to fatten stock, but hard to grow good stock to fatten on a farm of 100 acres.

His meaning was simply this: On a farm of the size mentioned, there was not room to successfully grow as many head of stock as the corn grown on the farm would fit or market, and that the alfalfa would grow the stock ready for the corn to fatten.

A friend of the writer who owns a 640-acre farm in [illegible], in the alfalfa belt, says that he is going to put all that farm into alfalfa just as fast as he can get the seeding done. His idea is to stock that farm with milking cows and make cattle for "the other man to finish." Did you ever stop to think that the man who sells the yearling steer makes more clear money than the man who finishes him?—[Farm Advocate.

DAUGHTERS REGISTER IN NAVY BOOK.

There is a large book outside the door of the chief of the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department in which all naval officers who report at their department are expected to write their names when they arrive and the probable date of their departure.

The other day a number of young women who are in Washington attending the congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution explored the department. They found the register and filled a page like this before Admiral Taylor's horrified messenger found out what was happening:

"Name, Mary Jones, Oshkosh; date of arrival, April 18; date of probable departure, unknown."—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A NEW DAMON AND PYTHIAS.

From North Wales comes the romantic story of a lifelong devotion, begun in early boyhood, between two men, and only ending in death at the ripe age of 80 years. Henry Price and Robert Ellis, when boys, struck up a friendship, pledging to stick to each other until death. When young men they emigrated to Australia, and lived and worked together, come weal, come woe, for more than fifty years.

Two years ago they both returned to their native village of Rhosllanerchrogog, in Wales, having each amassed considerable wealth. This week Price and Ellis died within twenty-four hours of each other, both being over 80 years of age.—[London Chronicle.

READING MANUSCRIPTS.

WHAT HAPPENS TO AN ARTICLE AFTER IT REACHES THE PUBLISHER.

[Washington Times:] It is interesting to know what stages the magazine article goes through before the author receives a check or a neatly printed notice which reads: "Your manuscript returned with thanks. We regret to say that it is not available at present. The fact that a manuscript is declined does not mean that it has no merit."

In the first place, allowing that a publisher receives an average of ten manuscripts a day, seven of that number will in all probability be rejected at sight. The publisher knows by long experience that he is safe in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred in disposing summarily of manuscripts whose writers cannot spell and who have not even a bowing acquaintance with Lindley Murray. A rapid glance through the first pages of a manuscript gives a fair idea of the literary ability of the author—that is, in general terms. The common complaint that publishers are not conscientious in the examination of manuscripts is unfounded. They are conscientious—it is to their interest to be so. They are just as desirous of discovering the talented young writer as he is to be discovered. But it is not necessary to eat the whole cheese in order to determine its quality.

The three manuscripts that remain after the first sifting are sent to certain persons in whose judgment the publisher has confidence. They read them through once, and if they appear to have merit they are sent on to other readers. Every manuscript that has possibilities passes through the hands of four or five readers. Each of these makes out a detailed report of it, setting forth its excellence in the eyes of that particular reader. When the reports on a certain manuscript are all in, the publisher reads them and makes up his mind as to whether it will be advisable for him to publish it. If he is not satisfied with the reports already received on it he may send it out to other readers and defer his decision until he hears from them.

There are many elements that influence publication. A manuscript may be good in itself, but it may not be what the particular publisher has a market for, or it may belong to a certain class with which he is already fully stocked. Manuscripts rejected by one firm are frequently accepted by another.

Readers are human and therefore liable to err. Temperament plays, necessarily, a considerable part in their decisions, but they are selected by the firms that engaged them for their critical judgment, their knowledge of good English, their acquaintance with both standard and contemporary literature, and for their skill in determining the selling qualities of a book.

If a story has live characters and is well put together, the publisher is willing to expend time and money in bringing it up to the standard he has set. Some readers are also editors of the firm, and they correct faulty sentences, rearrange mixed metaphors and see that the demands of time and place are not confused.

Few persons beginning to write are aware, probably, of the amount of editing which their work requires before it is in condition to appear in print. There are "solitary footmen approaching on horseback" in manuscripts that have been read and reread by the author a dozen times. It takes another eye than the writer's to detect these inconsistencies and blunders.

If the manuscript deals with a historic period it is sure to be sent to the reader who is competent to give absolute judgment on the accuracy of its statements. Any scientific work will be submitted to an expert in the particular branch with which it deals. Publishers wish works to bring them financial return and reputation.

MONTE CARLO.

The first stone of the famous Casino at Monte Carlo, in the Principality of Monaco, was laid in 1858. Its fame began to spread under the rule of the well known M. Blanc, and has gone on increasing, and, at the present moment, it is almost impossible to get a room in the town. Such a world-famous establishment is of necessity governed by some very stringent regulations. Admission is free, but there are some questions to be answered before the visitor can obtain entrance. He must be, in appearance at any rate, respectable. He must be over twenty-two. He must present his visiting card and name of the hotel at which he is staying. Furthermore, if he lives in Monaco he will not get in at all. This latter rule is a wise one, and is "protection" personified, for by it the management is assured that its profits come from outside the principality. Once past the stern guardians of the door, however, the visitor is free to look on at or take part in the various games of chance going on in the magnificent rooms. If he merely goes to look on, he will probably feel profoundly depressed. There is no gaiety. The wooden-faced croupiers with their parrotlike speech, handling money as if it were of no value; the equally wooden-faced waiters, who look like prize fighters; the desperate eagerness of some gamblers, the bored indifference of others, and the mixture of day and electric light, all tend to produce depression. The rooms, however, are very fine; so also are the gardens, and if you lose all your money at the tables the management will give you a second-class ticket home, after having first sent you round the various tables in charge of two waiters to make sure, with no pretense of secrecy, of the extent of your losses.—[London Daily Graphic.

MODERN POLITICS.

Clinton Scollard, the poet, narrated the other day an incident that does not speak very well for modern politics.

"A friend of mine," said Mr. Scollard, "is the principal of a city school. He gathered the school children before him in the assembly room one day last month, and he told them he wanted them to vote on a national flower.

"'France has a national flower,' he said. 'It is the lily. England's national flower is the rose. Japan's is the chrysanthemum. But we—we of this great big land of America—have no national flower at all. Little slips of paper are to be handed about now, and each of you is to vote for the flower that you think best suited for America's national emblem.'

"The youngsters began to think earnestly, and the paper slips were distributed. Back near the door, however, a little Italian boy was all this time making a good deal of disturbance. He seemed to be arguing heatedly with the boys around him—seemed to be dissuading them from some course or other.

"My friend noticed the noise. He called before him one of the Italian boy's neighbors, and he asked what the trouble back there was.

"'Why,' was the answer, 'Pietro doesn't want any of us to vote yet, and he says he isn't going to vote yet himself. He says people never vote until they find out how much they are to be paid.'"

EVIDENTLY A YANKEE.

When the train rolled into the station at Knoxville an old darky bore down upon it, balancing upon his finger tips a tray neatly covered with napkins.

"Got anything to eat, Rastus?" queried a passenger on the platform.

"Yes, sah, captain, anything you want," replied the darky, as he removed the napkins, exposing to view a variety of sandwiches with their crusts trimmed off, a large plate of fried chicken and some carefully selected apples and pears.

"Why, where did you get such fine fruit?"

"Up to Jones's. Dey have nice fruit in dere orchard."

"And who made these sandwiches?"

"Ma ole woman. She's a good cook."

"Where did you get that chicken?"

"Say, boss; yoh fom de Norf—ain't yoh?"

"Why do you ask that?"

"Why, no Southern gen'eman would ask a pooh ole niggah whar he got his chickens fom."—[Nashville American.

HE WOULDN'T DISTURB PRAYER.

On a recent Sunday morning, while services were going on, little Jack Conant, aged 6 years, saw a tiny flame issuing from the roof of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Osceola. He ran to the church to give the alarm. When he entered the preacher was praying. Being too reverent to interrupt a prayer, the little man stepped outside the door and waited until he heard the minister say "Amen." Then he ran in and yelled "Fire!"

The grown-up people were not so deliberate or reverent as little Jack. They leaped from their knees, forgetting all about the solemnity of the occasion, and ran for their lives.

By hard work the church was saved, but if the parson's prayer had been a little longer it would have burned to the ground.—[Kansas City Journal.

HE PAID THE FREIGHT.

"Why didn't you use that joke about the woman who went shopping and didn't buy anything?" asked the funny man.

Protection for Telephones.

SEVERAL devices have been brought out during the past few years, for attachment to telephones, to lessen the danger from infection in using them. There is no doubt that, in the case of those who are susceptible to disease—who have impure blood, in which noxious germs may find a good breeding ground—disease may be contracted from a telephone that is used, perhaps, during the day, by all sorts and conditions of men—and women. For instance, it is not a very wise thing for a person who has a predisposition to consumption to use a telephone into which, perhaps, a few minutes previously, a man far advanced in tuberculosis may have been spitting and breathing. Consequently, such attachments to telephones are useful. A circular has been received describing a new contrivance of this kind, the invention of a Riverside man, who has placed it on the market.

Hot Stuff.

IF the following dispatch from Austin, Tex., published in the Bisbee Review, is true, then one must suppose that this portion of Texas lies very near to a place that the preachers tell us is many degrees warmer than Yuma, in the "good old summer time." But then, perhaps, it is only one of those newspaper yarns for which the Southwest is famous:

"M. B. Hulen, one of the most prominent stockmen of West Texas, who is here on land business, today gave an interesting account of a remarkable phenomenon that is to be witnessed in that part of the State. While boring a well in search for stock water on a ranch in El Paso county, not far from Toyah, a good flow was struck which partially filled the well. The water, when brought to the surface, came into contact with the woodwork of the well-drilling outfit and the timbers were set on fire and burned. Exhaustive experiments were made with the water and in every instance it quickly set fire to wood and other inflammable materials with which it was placed in contact. The water also quickly dissolved or ate up the iron casing of the well. It is the opinion of local scientists that the water is highly charged with radio-active properties and that it is this element which produces the remarkable phenomenon. The water is to be analyzed by Dr. W. B. Phillips, director of the State Geological Survey, with the view of determining, if possible, what there is in it to produce the wonderful action which Mr. Hulen claims for it.

"Mr. Hulen owns 64,000 acres of land in the northeastern part of El Paso and in Howard counties. He lives quite a distance from the railroad, but his postoffice address is Toyah, Tex. He says that there are many other wonderful things to be witnessed in that part of the State. Among them is a lake of water which has a depth of several feet at 10 oclock at night but entirely disappears by 10 o'clock each day. The water in this lake is not salty, yet it rises and falls with the tide.

"There is also a large deposit of sulphur or some other mineral in that section which burns so easily that no fire can be made in its vicinity. He related an instance of a man who was riding across this deposit and threw a lighted match on the ground after lighting his cigarette. The match set fire to a deposit of the sulphur and it burned for three months, until rains came and extinguished the fire.

"There is a big region of country out there, he says, which has been very little explored by scientists. He looks for wonderful discoveries and devolpments to be made when its hidden wealth becomes better understood by investors and others."

Future of the Pacific Coast.

THE following words of Henry Watterson, the veteran editor of the Louisville Courier, who is on a lecture tour along the Coast, are worthy of reproduction and preservation. They are part of a lecture delivered in Potland, Or.:

"In fifty years there will be a population of 50,000,000 in the section of the country west of the Rocky Mountains. By that time the dominating influence will be on the Pacific and not on the Atlantic Coast.

"Westward is still the course of empire. By that time there will be one and perhaps two isthmian canals and the Pacific Coast will not be over thirty-six hours distant by rail from New York. The Pacific Ocean will then be the great highway of commerce and this magnificent section, so blessed by nature, so bland in its climate and so riotously prolific, will logically come to the very forefront.

"Many cities will dot the whole Pacific Coast, achieving an importance now scarcely dreamed of. Here will be found the great opportunities for the rising generation and these things will come to pass during the lifetime of many of the boys who are now attending public school. If the boys who are here do not make a success of life with the opportunities which are opening up before them and with the advantages of their magnificent environment, the fault will be with them and not with the country in which they have been so fortunately born or bred."

Rubber from Weeds.

HERE is some more about the substitute for rubber, found in Arizona and other sections of the arid Southwest. It is from the Tombstone Prospector: The Prospector has on several occasions referred to the new discovery of rubber to be manufactured from the common "rabbit weed" brush indigenous to Arizona and the arid West. Experiments have proven that the weed produces a good quality of rubber. A factory in Dayton, O., has just turned out several articles made from the juice of the plant, consisting of rubber erasers, shoe heels, horseshoe pads, plastic bandages, flesh brushes, and various other articles. The Dayton company has ordered 1000 pounds more of the gum, paying 80 cents per pound. This seems to be the final test and there is every reason to believe that it is destined to become one of the most important industries of the West. The conditions under which the plant grows are such that it can be cultivated over a large area with little trouble or expense, and the returns are sure to be highly profitable.

Making Felt Goods at Dolgeville.

THINGS are humming at the big felt factory of the Alfred Dolge Company at the new Dolgeville, in the San Gabriel Valley. The complicated machinery is all in place, to the value of $100,000, and will soon be turning out felt slippers at the rate of 500 pairs a day, which output will shortly be increased to four times that amount.

The vast buildings, now occupied as factories, were formerly the winery buildings of the San Gabriel Wine Company, which have been transformed for the purpose. They were built of brick and are of exceptional strength, and are well adapted for their present use. They aggregate 150,000 square feet of floor space, giving room for the present capacity of the works to be trebled, whenever it becomes necessary. The interior of the factories is bright, cheerful and clean, with every accommodation for the comfort of the employés. Where else in this country may factory hands look out of a window, across the tops of blossoming orange trees at a range of snow-clad mountains, while feathery pepper trees surround the building?

There is a big stock of raw wool on hand. Most of it is from the Southern California Channel Islands, although some, of a particular quality, is from South Africa. It is a long process, from the raw, dirty, greasy wool, to the finished felt, the wool going through no less than thirty-one different machines, several of which are the invention of Mr. Dolge. Then the pieces of felt, forty-five yards in length, go to the dyeing tanks, and finally to the big dryer, which is in the open air, and will be protected only by canvas. Next begins the process of shoemaking. The felt first passes through fourteen machines in the cutting room, then through five sewing machines, and then, consecutively, through processes of lasting, drying, sole laying, bottom sewing, sole leveling, heeling, and finally seven finishing machines. So a pair of felt slippers, that may retail for, perhaps, a dollar, have to go through a hundred thousand dollars' worth of machinery, after, perhaps, the wool of which they are made has been transported 10,000 miles, by sea and land.

This is the only factory in the United States that works raw wool up into finished felt goods. There is a separate factory for the manufacture of felt piano hammers, work upon which will be begun later. The company has orders ahead for a large quantity of goods. Slippers are made in many different styles, sizes and colors, for men, women and children. Some of them are especially neat and artistic, trimmed with the fur of the coney—rabbit skins—which comes from France. If we still had Belgian hares around here, their fur might perhaps have been used for this purpose. It should be noted that the wool loses no less than 70 per cent. of its weight in the process of cleaning. Underneath the cleaning machine is a pile of fine dirt, which should make a good fertilizer, if it were not so full of the seeds that the "sheepses" have collected on their backs from weeds and brush.

Mr. Dolge has a perfect system of registration, so that whenever a complaint is sent in about a pair of shoes he can refer to his books and find out what particular wool the shoe was made of, also the name of each of the fifty or more employés through whose hands the raw material and shoe passed.

A number of the factory hands are old employés of Mr. Dolge, from New York State. It is interesting to see them come trooping in, men, women and children, to Mr. Dolge's residence, to greet him and his good wife and their faithful domestic, whom they have perhaps known since they were children. There is somewhat of a patriarchal air about the institution, although Mr. Dolge, while believing strongly in everything that tends to the uplifting of the workingman, is strongly against paternalism. He believes that people should be helped to help themselves, otherwise they will lose their self-respect.

Mr. Dolge is for the present occupying a neat cottage, formerly occupied by the manager of the winery. It contains many beautiful relics of the time when the occupant lived in a big house in Dolgeville, N. Y., that was always full of guests and when he kept a dozen servants. There is some beautiful oak furniture, carved in Germany, artistic rugs, and other evidences of the traveled man and woman of refinement.

Dolgeville is rapidly assuming city airs. There is a postoffice, a restaurant and a small hotel. Another factory has been established, in which metal tanks are made. If the land company would pursue a liberal policy, offering inducements to factories in the shape of free sites, there is little doubt that a number of factories might be induced to locate there, as the site is a very convenient one, close to a junction of the Southern Pacific, with the San Gabriel electric line just in the rear. It is expected that the product turned out here will be much finer than the ordinary felt made in the East, for the reason that it is dried in the sun, whereas all other wool prepared in the United States is dried by steam. After years of research, Mr. Dolge discovered that this is the reason why the felt made in France is so superior in quality to that made in Germany and England. The woolen establishments of Southern France dry their wool in the open air, which is impossible in the moist, cloudy climates of Germany and England. This applies equally to piano felts and a certain grade of fine broadcloth, made in France, with which Germany and England have been unable to compete. It is quite probable that ere long we may see the introduction here of factories for the manufacture of fine hats, clothing material, cloths and other woollen goods.

In reply to a request, Mr. Dolge furnished the following statement, showing the leading advantages possessed by a manufacturer in Southern California over his competitor in the East:

First, as to raw material: We are located in the midst of the wool belt of Southern California, Arizona and Texas, producing the best felting wools in the world. Northern California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Montana, Utah, New Mexico, are within easy reach, if such wools are required. We buy our wools at first hand, from the growers, at a saving of from 25 to 40 per cent. In felting wools this means much. There is a difference to the California manufacturer of about 35 per cent. in the cost of the raw material.

Second, as to quality of wool: Located in the wool belt, the Southern California manufacturer has the pick of such wools as are best suited for his demands. The climate of Southern California permits of drying, and at the same time bleaching wool in the open, thus retaining the natural elasticity in the wool, which aids in the production of superior goods, as against the steam drying process universally used in colder climates.

Third, as to economy in manufacturing: The climate of Southern California is such that heating of the factories is hardly ever necessary, the temperature being nearly the same every month in the year. In New York State it costs from $25,000 to $30,000 a year to properly heat, say, 150,000 square feet of factory floor space, and provide the live steam for operating the machines. We estimate that it will cost not over $5000 a year to supply our 150,000 square feet with all the live steam and heat required, especially when we dry and bleach all our wool and felts with the aid of the sun and our dry atmosphere. Therefore, we have in the item of fuel alone an advantage of $20,000 to $25,000 a year as against our Eastern competitors.

Fourth, as to labor: Contrary to the usual supposition, wages are not any higher here than in the East for skilled labor, but it is estimated that operatives can and do produce from 10 to 20 per cent. more work here in a given time than they can do in the Eastern States, because of our even climate, which is very invigorating and never causes that laggard, tired feeling from which Eastern mill operatives suffer so much, especially during the sultry summer days. Nor do the operatives need to lose from one to two hours every day during the cold days in winter, before they get warmed up to do efficient work, as is the case in almost every mill in the East.

Fifth, as to buildings: In our particular case the actual cost of our factories, covering 150,000 square feet of floor space, is not quite $60,000, or 40 cents per square foot, hence our expense for rent or interest on real estate is about one-half of the average cost to an Eastern manufacturer.

Sixth, as to power: We use electric power, costing approximately $25 per H.P. per year, supplied by the Pacific Electric Light and Power Company. If this company should advance its rates, we can produce power at the same rate, using crude oil for fuel. The price of crude oil is about 50 per cent. of the cost of coal per H.P.

Seventh, as to saving of freight on manufactured goods: The Eastern felt mills sell their product to shoemakers, piano manufacturers, etc., in the sheet or piece. We use the product of our felt mills ourselves for shoes and piano hammers, thus saving freight, because we can ship the finished article to the East.

It must not be overlooked that we have a large market for our felt shoes and slippers west of the Rocky Mountains, a territory which we can claim entirely our own, because the eastern manufacturer has the freight against him there.

It is supposed that the freight to the East is detrimental to successful manufacturing in California. It has been shown that the California manufacturer saves from 10 to 12½ cents per pound on his scoured wool as against the eastern manufacturer.

Estimating the present capacity of our mills at, say, 150,000 pounds of scoured wool per year, we have a saving of $15,000 to $18,000 per year in our raw material, and considering the many other advantages. I will in addition only mention the saving in fuel, amounting to $20,000 to $25,000 per year, and we find that as against $1125 extra freight we have a saving of from $35,000 to $43,000 in raw material and fuel.

Physical Education—IV—Eating and Drinking. (3)

HERE is the fourth installment of E. B. Warman's series of articles on physical education, written for The Times. This closes Mr. Warman's discussion of the important subject of eating and drinking. It will be followed by others, on exercises, bathing, etc.:

"The efficacy of sugar: Sugar makes heat, and heat gives muscular energy. The various governments realize this fact, in regard to their soldiers. Since the Spanish-American War, one house in New York has shipped over sixty tons of sweets to our soldiers in the Philippines, Cuba and Porto Rico. The German government, experimenting on exclusive meat, cereal or vegetable diets (or combinations of these) made a test of adding chocolate and a limited amount of other confectionery to the regular rations, with the result of better health and greater endurance of the troops. Every wheelman knows the value of a cake of sweetened chocolate for a long run.

"We should also remember that all starchy food taken into the stomach is first converted into what is known as invert sugar, before it is absorbed into the blood. The muscles are fed by it, and strength is derived from it. It relieves fatigue and increases the general vigor of the system. The more active the muscle the more it consumes. If enough invert sugar is not supplied, the body consumes its own fat and then its own muscle. On the other hand, the absorption of large amounts of invert sugar is without harm, for what is not required in the animal economy is stored up in the liver and muscles. Its waste product, after oxidation is non-irritating, and is disposed of without taxing any organ. The water is eliminated chiefly by the kidneys, and the carbon dioxide by the lungs.

"Eating for strength: Feats of strength require a diet in accordance with the needs; that is, prolonged or otherwise. If you want to perform, for a short time, the greatest possible amount of muscular labor, as in a game of ball, rowing, running, bicycling, lifting or accomplishing any unusual feat of strength requiring an extraordinary effort, always select a diet rich in protein, animal or vegetable. (These make blood, bone, muscle, etc.) If, on the other hand, you take a great amount of steady exercise daily, or perform a great amount of uniformly heavy work every day, but at no time of a very intense character, you should partake of a diet containing little protein, but rich in carbohydrates. Remember, starches make fat, and fat and sweets make heat, and heat gives muscular energy.

"The proteids are the flesh foods.

"The fats and sweets are the heat foods.

"The carbohydrates are the work foods.

"You should eat as you work: If you work much, eat much. But you should eat at the right time, and pay more attention to quality than to quantity. The hearty meal should follow, not precede a heavy day's work. I am well aware that the majority of persons get the cart before the horse; but I am also well aware that the majority of persons are not well.

"One gets the strength of today from the average [illegible] today;—that is, except in the liquids and from foods that readily liquify. A hearty breakfast before the day's work is physiologically wrong. Before that it can be utilized it must undergo the process of digestion (an average time of three hours,) then that of absorption and assimilation (requiring more hours;) therefore, either mental or physical work immediately following a hearty meal will retard the natural process thus causing indigestion which, oft repeated, causes dyspepsia.

"Put your money in the bank today if you expect to be drawn upon unusually heavy tomorrow. In this same manner prepare today for heavy physical and mental [illegible] tomorrow. How can that be done? In this manner. Reverse the usual order of things. Your heartiest meal of the day (other things being equal,) should be the last meal, usually from 6 to 7 p.m. Why? Because there will be nothing to interfere with the digestion when the work and worries of the day are over. There will be ample time for that digestion ere you retire, and (what is of greater importance, still) absorption and assimilation will take place while you are asleep, under the most favorable conditions; for the body now being in a horizontal position, less action is required of the heart in the matter of circulation (not forced to work against gravitation.) The body is now undergoing repairs; the tissues that have been torn down during the day are being replaced with new material, the energy supplied by the nourishment taken during the hearty meal will, ere the morning, flow to muscle and nerve and recreate you. If you have been wise in your choice of foods, and equally wise in their preparation for [illegible], nature will do the rest, and she never [illegible]. You will start the day with sufficient stored-up energy to run you to the next coaling station—about 6 p.m. There is, however, no harm in the eating of a light, easily-digested breakfast.

"Pardon me in making a personal allusion to assure you that this is no delusion. I take my own medicine. When wife and I take a wheel ride of fifty or more miles we eat nothing for breakfast, nothing for luncheon and nothing when we return until after we have cleaned our wheels, taken a bath, and changed our costumes. During this time the muscles relax, the blood is free to flow to the stomach to take care of a good, square meal. Hungry? Yes. Tired? Never. Don't know what the word means."

[Note by the Editor: Mr. Warren's suggestion in regard to eating for tomorrow is specially interesting and valuable, and has not been covered in any work of hygiene that the editor has come across.

The editor differs from Mr. Warman in regard to the hygienic value of sugar—that is to say, of commercial sugar, made from the cane or beet. To begin with, it should be remembered that there are several varieties of sweet stuff known as sugar, and of other sweetened material, under various names. Cane sugar is different from the grape sugar found in varying quantities in all fruits. Then there is glucose, made by treating starch with sulphuric acid. There is also a substance called "saccharine," first produced by Fahlberg, a German-American chemist. It is a product of coal tar, and while 230 times as sweet as cane sugar, has no nutritive value. It is said that all sugar is changed to cane sugar in the body before it is assimilated.

Commercial sugar is 5 per cent. water and 95 per cent. sugar, containing no protein, or fat, or starch. It is therefore purely a hydrocarbon—a heat and force producer, but valueless for the building of flesh and muscle. The editor believes that sugar, in the concentrated manufactured form, is injurious, especially when consumed in such large quantities as is customary in the United States, where candy is eaten by the pound, while in Europe they eat it by the ounce. Sugar in this concentrated form will not only overheat the blood, but is very liable to ferment in the stomach, causing gastric troubles. Here is what the Encyclopedia Brittanica says on the subject:

"All sugars are liable to fermentative changes; a special character of the three principal vegetable sugars is that, when brought into contact as solutions with yeast (living cells of saccharomyces,) under suitable conditions, they suffer vinous fermentation, i. e., break up substantially into carbonic acid and alcohol. Dextrose and levulose break up directly. Cane sugar first, under the influence of a soluble ferment in the yeast, gets inverted, and the invert sugar then ferments, the dextrose disappearing at a greater rate than the levulose."

Advocates of sugar are in the habit of pointing to the negroes of the West Indies, who have fine teeth. This argument will not bear investigation. These negroes do not eat concentrated, crystallized, white sugar, but chew the sugar cane. Even that, however, the editor believes is far less desirable than the grape sugar as nature has stored it in ripe fruits, mixing it with a due proportion of acids, so as to make an ideal food for man. The large consumption of sugar in this country is undoubtedly a great cause of the widely prevailing dyspepsia, and of bad teeth, the sugar acting not directly on the teeth, but indirectly, through the fumes that arise from the stomach, where the sugar decomposes, causing acidity and eruptions.

[The editor regards both the sugar of commerce and the salt of commerce as injurious, especially when taken in large quantities. Both are habits—and bad habits. Sugar as found in fruits is excellent. The natural salts found in all foods are excellent, being highly necessary for the nerves, but the commercial salt—chloride of sodium—is bad. The foolish and wasteful methods of modern cookery, where the essential salts of foods are usually thrown away with the water in which the food is cooked, lead to a craving for some substitute, and this is furnished in the shape of the injurious chloride of sodium, which many people use to great excess. If consumed at all, it should only be in very small quantities, and occasionally, as a medicine. As a mineral, it has no food value, and cannot be assimilated by the system. Both sugar and salt are hard on the kidneys. The former is usually forbidden in cases of kidney disease, and the latter should be.]

Nitrogen from the Air.

THE editor of a hygienic magazine recently stated that man cannot derive his supply of nitrogen from the air, but must obtain it from plants, and fruits, and grains, and flesh foods. This is the view usually taken by scientists, and has not until recently been questioend. But is it true?

Mention was recently made in this department of a statement by Mr. Darling, the so-called "nature man," who recently moved from Los Angeles to Hawaii. In reply to an inquiry, he claimed that, when the lungs are thoroughly developed, they become to a certain extent transformers, and are able to extract a certain amount of nitrogen from the atmosphere. Other hygienists have been quietly investigating along this line.

This, as will be readily seen, is an exceedingly important question, for if it is true, it must overturn all our preconceived ideas in regard to the quality and quantity of food necessary for man. If the nitrogenous elements, that supply the system with muscle and flesh forming material, may be partly assimilated from the surrounding atmosphere, then, obviously, man needs much less nitrogenous food, such as grain, and pulse and meat. Also, if this is true, then it becomes still more apparent that we all eat far too much, overburdening the system with material that overtaxes it to get rid of. The editor has occasionally said, in a jocular way, that eating is a habit, like drinking alcoholic beverages and smoking. Should this atmospheric nitrogen theory prove correct, then there is more truth than humor in the statement.

The editor recently wrote to A. Victor Segno, president of the American Institute of Mentalism, of Los Angeles, who is about to erect a fine home for the institution near Echo Park, asking whether he had investigated this subject and whether he could give any pointers in regard to it. He replied as follows. Regarding his reference to plants, all intelligent students of science are, of course, aware that plants extract nitrogen from the atmosphere. This is strikingly shown in the case of the legumes, which are planted to furnish nitrogen to poor soil. But can men and animals do the same to some extent? Mr. Segno says:

"Your reference to extracting nitrogen from the air as a food, interests me. I have given this matter considerable thought, and I am just at the point where I would like to have the proofs you are looking for. I do not know where you can get what you desire. I wish I did. I fear that if the truth of the matter were known some one would attempt to monopolize the product, and put it on the market as a superior breakfast food. At present it is possibly the only cheap food we have.

"We know that there is a marked difference in the health and strength of people having free access to pure air, from those who live indoors. That air sustains life we must admit, and that a lack of it causes death. We know that oxygen is not a food, but a scavenger, that consumes waste matter. When oxygen meets carbon in the human system combustion results and carbonic acid gas is produced. An excess of oxygen destroys the body, as illustrated by a rare atmosphere in high altitudes. Insufficient oxygen causes death, by allowing the system to become congested with (carbon) waste matter. Conclusion—oxygen does not build up the cells, hence does not directly produce health and strength.

"Nitrogen is a food. We are completely immersed in it. It is constantly entering our system. Is it reasonable to believe that it has no effect upon our bodies? Is there any known gas that if taken into the lungs will pass out again without making some perceptible effect on the body? If the lungs are susceptible to all other known gases, where is the logic in making an exception of nitrogen? I believe that nitrogen is absorbed by the lungs as food, and builds up the cells and tissues, while the oxygen performs its duty of carrying away the old worn-out cells in the form of carbonic gas (carbon dioxid.)

"It is impossible to make conclusive tests on human beings, for to deprive them of oxygen, while testing the value of nitrogen, would of course cause death. Therefore investigation in that direction is necessarily limited. Plant life, however, demonstrates the nutritive value of air, based on the following test:

"A quantity of earth was dried for the purpose of extracting as much moisture as possible. It was then weighed, and fifty pounds of it put into a box. Water was added, and some apple seeds planted. Three of them grew. For five years the trees remained in the box, nothing being added but water. At the end of that time they were taken out, and all the earth saved and dried as before, and then weighed. It had lost nothing in weight. Then, where did the trees secure the material of which they were composed, if not from the water, air and electrical rays of the sun? Water and air are closely related. I do not contend that this is conclusive proof that man lives on air, but I think that the same elements that sustain plant life will and do sustain the physical man. We can do without solid food, but can we do without air? Undoubtedly, man eats too much and overtaxes the strength of his digestive system. Habit is responsible for this. Nature has been forced to adapt itself to the conditions, and dispose in some way of the food forced upon it. The most marvelous thing to me is that nature can sustain life in man for so many years, considering how persistently he works to poison and destroy his body."

Any reader who can throw light on this interesting and important subject is invited to write.

Locomotor Ataxia.

C. O. WRITES from San Diego as follows:

"What are the premonitory symptoms of lomotor ataxia? What is the cause of the disease? Is there any cure, and how?"

Locomotor ataxia is a disease of the spinal cord. It is a disease of middle life, half the cases occurring between thirty and forty years, and almost all between twenty and fifty years. It is said to be exceedingly uncommon in early life, and it rarely begins in late life. It is more common in men than in women, in the proportion of about ten to one, and more common in the larger cities than in the smaller towns and the country. The potent, although not the sole cause, is said to be syphilis. Among other causes are given infectious and toxic processes, exposure to wet and cold, and excesses of various kinds. A long interval—from five to twenty years—often elapses between the cause and the symptoms of the disease. It is often insidious in onset, and may advance slowly. Not rarely there are remissions, sometimes with long stationary periods. Occasionally the disease pursues a relatively acute course. Among the early symptoms of locomotor ataxia are shooting pains in the thighs. These usually occur in paroxysms of varying duration, from hours to days, at longer or shorter intervals—from days to months. Sometimes simultaneously, but usually at a later period of the disease, occur painful paroxysms—seizures known as crises, affecting various portions of the body. There is unsteadiness in walking and standing, the gait being staggering, not unlike that of a drunken man, and walking in the dark and backward is difficult or impossible. The feet are raised high over the ground, thrown somewhat and fall awkwardly. Fatigue is induced with undue readiness. Impairment of sight is common. Impairment or loss of hearing, of smell, or of taste is occasionally observed. Retention of urine may occur, or on the other hand incontinence. Constipation is the rule.

This disease has usually been held by physicians to be incurable. When degeneration of the spinal system is far advanced, it is, of course, incurable. In the earlier stages much may, undoubtedly, be done. A friend of the editor, in Southern California, who suffered for many years with this disease, being unable to walk without a cane, is now completely cured, having thrown away his stick. He attributes his cure to "will power." However that may be, he is certainly cured.

The correspondent should do everything in his power to improve his general health by paying attention to the laws of hygiene as they are expounded from week to week in this department, and in good hygienic books and magazines. In that way he will place himself in a condition favorable to recovery, if recovery is possible. Sea bathing, followed by a sun bath, and friction with the hands, should be good. Galvanic treatment may help. Probably the most helpful thing, however, would be a prolonged series of osteopathic treatments. The osteopaths claim that all diseases center around the spinal system, which is their "strong holt." The editor would urge the correspondent to give this treatment a trial, if, as is to be presumed, he has noted symptoms of the ailment.

A Pure-food Campaign.

HEALTH OFFICER POWERS has started a pure-food campaign in Los Angeles. He will find plenty of field for his operations. As The Times has said, it is scarcely possible to pick up a single food product in a grocery store, outside of eggs and apples, that is not adulterated in some manner, either by an admixture of a cheaper substance or by the use of preservatives. Dr. Powers claims, among other things, to have found that some of the much-advertised cereal foods are adulterated with sawdust. Some of them certainly taste like it. The man who will put sawdust in an expensive breakfast food, when he can buy wheat at a cent a pound, and wholesale it at 10 cents a pound, or more, ought to be put in the pillory. Or, better still, he ought to have a lot of free advertising. The Times will give him a little, when the reports are all in Physicians' Fees.

AT a recent meeting of the Sunset Club, in Los Angeles, the subject for discussion was the fees of professional men. Interesting papers on the subject were read by a lawyer, a physician, a teacher and by one of the general public, who foot the bills.

Speaking from a lawyer's standpoint, Maj. Lee put forth the view that it is quite right for lawyers to charge clients according to the wealth of the latter. If a physician should do the same thing, it might lead to some queer complications. For instance, it might be considered quite proper for a doctor to charge Rockefeller a million dollars, if called on to treat him for a simple case of "bellyache."

The best plan would be, as the editor has frequently said, for physicians to charge as they do in China, and to some extent in Europe, a yearly sum to each person or family, for medical advice. In this manner it would be to their financial advantage to keep a person in health, whereas it is now to their financial advantage that there should be much sickness, a most grossly abnormal condition of affairs, as the editor has frequently said, also a great temptation to a poor young practitioner—or a poor old practitioner, for that matter—who happens to secure a wealthy patient.

About Fasting.

A. W. M. writes as follows from Santa Monica. He asks a good many questions, and they must be answered quite briefly:

"I hope you will give me a little information about the care of the body. I have started a twenty-day fast. I started a fast a month ago, and got over the worst part of it (six days) when I had to do some special work. I knew I could not do justice to the man for whom I had to do the work on an empty stomach, and believing that he had more of it than I found to be the case, I broke my fast, much to my regret. I have had dyspepsia for twenty-five years—not very seriously. I eat plain food, but I want plenty of it, and a two-meal-a-day diet doesn't appeal to me very forcibly. I want to eat until I feel full. No doubt it's wrong. I do not drink excepting some at long intervals, and then I buy a bottle of whisky and drink one part of whisky to ten of water. I do not touch any for months at a time. When I get over this fast I will start on a fruit-and-nut diet, not exclusively, but nearly so. What I wish to know, is dried fruit, such as peaches, apricots and apples, properly cooked, wholesome?

"I have a little girl 9 years old. She has a weak stomach and often feels nauseous and dizzy. I have tried to induce her to try the two-meal-a-day diet. She would like to, but she wants her breakfast just the same. Would it be right to compel her to make two meals a day? I don't know if I could treat her so, but would like to know, just the same. I suppose a teaspoonful of olive oil is enough to break my fast with, and how soon after that could I eat a substantial meal?"

You don't seem to have a very firm determination. Great determination and will power are necessary to keep up a fast, especially when one is surrounded by gorging people.

Dried fruit is less wholesome and less desirable for several reasons than fresh fruit, and should only be used when the latter cannot be obtained. Canned fruit

PERFECT ARTIFICIAL DENTURES
There is much more to the making of artificial teeth than the mere plaster mold. It would be just as logical to try to fit every kind of feet with shoes made on the same last as it is for a dentist to adhere to the book theories in making artificial dentures. Every mouth has its own peculiar characteristic to which the dentures must be adapted. An ill fitting plate will entirely change the facial expression. Therefore it is doubly important for the dentist not only to study the mouth, but also the contour of the face.
I MAKE PERFECT-FITTING PLATES
There is never a risk on the part of my patients when I make a plate. And most important, every patient receives a plate that is the result of painstaking study and perfect workmanship in its manufacture. The natural teeth are perfectly matched and the plate fitted to conform with the shape of the mouth. By no means attempt to force the little girl to eat only two meals a day. Endeavor to induce her to gradually diminish the amount taken for breakfast, until she takes perhaps nothing but a cup of hot milk, or chocolate, or milk-coffee, with a piece of toast or zwieback. You may break your fast on any light food that appeals to you, taking care not to eat too much at once. After eating several light meals, during a couple of days, you may safely eat until you are satisfied. Dr. Tanner broke his celebrated forty days' fast on a big watermelon. Olive oil, beaten up with tomato juice, or fresh fruit, or a little thin gruel, or milk, are all good things to break a fast on.

A Healthy Hygienist.

EDWARD B. WARMAN, who is contributing a series of articles on physical education to this department, is himself a good example of common-sense physical culture. On his birthday he rides on a bicycle a mile for each year of his age. He wrote to the editor, under date of April 29:

"Just 57 years young today. Wife and I celebrated it yesterday. I rode fourteen miles (out South Main and back,) then picked up Mrs. Warman and together we rode to Ocean Park, Santa Monica, Sawtelle, Soldiers' Home and return by same route, covering sixty miles—taking three miles extra, to grow on. We ate nothing from 6 p.m. the night previous until 6 p.m. last night, although we had finished our trip by 3 p.m. Running time, only six hours."

Appendicitis—Coal Oil as a Cure All.

THE following interesting communication has been received from E. R. Fox:

"I have seen several inquiries in regard to the use of oil in appendicitis. As I acquired the troublesome disease before it became fashionable, some twenty-five years ago, I have had a chance to learn something about it. During that period I have averaged about one attack for each year, and in spite of frequent application by the surgical fraternity, I have managed to exist without the application of the knife.

"To appreciate the value of my suggestion, based on my experience, it is necessary to premise that appendicitis is nothing more nor less than an inflammation of the bowel, of which the appendix is a part. Whatever the cause, this is the effect. The cause of mine was an old knife wound in that vicinity. For many years the course of treatment was by local applications, liniments, mustard plasters, or turpentine heated and rubbed in, which was the most effective, together with the ordinary purgatives, more or less quick acting, to discharge and relieve the distention of the bowel. These methods of treatment kept me in bed from forty-eight hours to three weeks in one case, in the most excruciating agony.

"On one occasion, being away from home, and having a violent attack, with no remedies at hand, after midnight, I sent out for a doctor and some turpentine, found a bottle of castor oil and took a dose, and lay down to await the return of my messenger with the doctor. As he appeared to have been gone for years, in desperation I put out the light, took the lamp and poured the oil in liberal quantity over my stomach and side—and incidentally a large quantity on the bed clothes. A vigorous friction for five minutes produced a blissful ease, and when my messenger arrived with the doctor I was in a sound and comfortable, but exhausted sleep.

"This was my experiment, and its result of only two or three hours of suffering in my later attacks. Now 'to point the moral and adorn the tale.' I discovered that an immediate dose, a large one of castor oil, to vacate, stimulate and warm the bowel, for internal use, and a brisk friction with the most ordinary or cheapest oil—not Pratt's, it is too fatty—and the patient will experience an immediate relief, which soon becomes permanent.

"This treatment is equally useful in ovarian inflammation that many women are subject to. As a case in point: One of the members of my family was confined to her bed for a fortnight with inflammation of the ovaries, which persistently refused to yield to medical treatment. The young lady had with equal persistence refused to use kerosene or coal oil because 'it smelled bad.' At the end of this time the doctor declared that it was 'death or the knife.' I ordered him out of the house, with my opinion of him and his suggestion, in the strongest kind of Sunday-school language, and as I was then on the warpath, and prepared to combat the women of the household, I peremptorily ordered her mother to rub her with the coal oil immediately, and again in a few hours, which being done, the young woman was out of bed the next morning, even if she did not smell as sweet as a rose.

"While I am on the subject, it might be as well 'to empty my bottle,' as I don't know that I shall ever bother again with the matter of meddling with the public. Few know of the wonderful remedy they have at hand in that same coal oil, and the wide range of its usefulness. In fact, I have known it to cure anything from a toothache to a broken leg.

"Beside the subject matters as above stated, it will cure any form of colic; it will relieve constriction of the bladder with retention of urine in man or beast, it will cure any form of sore throat; it will cure pneumonia, giving instantaneous relief if used both internally and externally; in fact, it is the only thing that I know of that will penetrate and furnish relief by allaying inflammation to the innermost parts of the system; as a liniment it has no equal. It will cure acute rheumatism caused by colds, and reduce the enlargement of injured bones. As an antiseptic, it will cleanse old and infected wounds, cleansing and healing them. It will keep fleas, mosquitoes and other insects away from you, and will immediately relieve the irritation from their bites, and for children will drive out all the 'soldier bugs' if lightly applied to the hair. I always carry a small bottle as a protection against that curse of life in the tropical jungles, 'pinaleas' and 'garapatas'—pin-point ticks, that bury themselves in your hide by the thousands in a day's march, furnishing an irritation that would send you to a lunatic asylum in a short time. It will relieve a rash or prickly heat as well. I don't think that I need suggest any more uses for it except that, if applied and burned off, it enables one to remove the rust from a rusty bolt."

If Mr. Fox is only partially correct in his ideas as to the curative properties of coal oil, Mr. Rockefeller's income should be considerably increased, from now on. Possibly, vaseline might also prove efficacious, for external use. It would be more agreeable and convenient to use than kerosene. Vaseline, as is generaly known, is a preparation of petroleum. Of late, a number of remedies prepared from coal tar have become popular with the medical fraternity—for internal use. They are said to have injurious after effects, as indeed do all drugs that are poisonous, or semi-poisonous. That is, however, another thing.

Apropos of this writer's remarks on appendicitis, is it not sad to think how many thousands of people have been legally murdered, by cutting them open, to cure this newly-invented disease, appendicitis, which, as Mr. Fox truthfully says, is nothing but inflammation of the bowel. In other words, what our grandfathers called "bellyache." The free use of olive oil, internally, is also highly recommended in cases of appendicitis, as previously described in these columns, also the bowels should be thoroughly emptied by liberal injections of tepid water.

How the Deadly Drug Habit is Acquired.

A LOS ANGELES physician was recently quoted in a contemporary as stating that the habit of using deadly drugs, such as morphine and cocaine, is in a large measure due to criminal negligence on the part of druggists, who sell the stuff without first requiring a prescription, signed by some physician.

This is bad, it is true, but the responsibility for the beginning of the drug habit, which destroys body and soul, must properly be laid at the doors of those physicians who prescribe such deadly poisons, for the sake of deadening a little pain, or removing the symptoms of some disease, which they cannot cure. Morphine and cocaine are not one whit less deadly and dangerous when taken "by advice of a physician," than when they are bought at a drug store, without any prescription.

Yes, indeed, nine-tenths of the unfortunates—outside of the criminal class—who have fallen victims to these deadly habits, owe their first introduction to the vice through some prescription that has been given them by a physician.

Breathing and "New Thought"—and Bosh.

ONE feature of the prevailing physical-culture boom is the teaching of breathing. All sorts of complicated instructions are offered—in return for cash—as to how, when and where to breathe, including the "Yogi" method, supposed to be a secret carefully guarded by holy men of India, for many centuries. This reminds one somewhat of the wonderful herb, discovered by a missionary in Central Africa, who is willing to send it, absolutely free, to suffering men.

You don't need any complicated instructions as to how to breathe. Do some good hard work or play in the open air, and you will have to breathe—and breathe deep. Try walking, or running, or mountain climbing, or digging in the garden, or golfing, or washing, or scrubbing floors, and you will soon find that you are breathing deep breaths. This, with five minutes, morning and evening, of simple "setting-up exercises," such as they use at West Point, is all that is necessary along this line.

Hygienists should not begin to fall into the errors of the regular profession, in attaching a lot of unnecessary mystery to simple processes. There is, however, evidently danger of this, and especially in connection with what is inaptly named "New Thought." Here is an article on the subject by L. W. Billingley, of Lincoln, Neb. It is from "Suggestion," the leading exponent of the science of mentalism in America, a magazine that often contains good articles:

"Many 'New Thought' cranks and frauds are abroad in the land, making many kinds of extravagant claims. The miracles of the Great Master are to be put in the shade as marvels by many of these mountebanks and would-be's.

"Before the sick can be made well, the well hypnotized, poverty metamorphosed into wealth, the aged evolved to youth by new mental processes, emitting electrical vibrations from some mystical circle, after liberal coin is put up, common sense must wield a club, and give reason a show.

"We are importuned to believe that a mortgage-ridden man can sit on a rail fence in Texas and by getting into vibration with some 'New Thought' circle, lift a $3000 mortgage from his farm in a 'jiffy,' or an adipose woman can become a sylph, or a lung-fighting consumptive a Sandow, quicker than you can say 'scat,' providing you have the faith born of unlimited credulity, preceded by the payments of generous admission fees.

"That mind has great power over the physical body is no longer an open question. But no one can secure wholesome and lasting results in the realm of the 'New Psychology' until he has attained self-conquest. Gorging a gross appetite is irreconcilable with mental or spiritual unfoldment. The spendthrift cannot mass wealth without taking into account common sense, thrift, economy and industry.

"Development on any plane of life must be preceded by the subjugation and overthrow of weak and unworthy qualities. The fat cannot become lean, the sick well, the impecunious affluent, the immoral good, the dull hypnotic, by joining mystic circles, reading occult literature, attending lectures of adepts or being read by clairvoyants.

"Before we can heal others of diseases in mind or body we must heal ourselves, and be thoroughly normal and sane. Little by little we can grow wholesome and strong in the helpful religion of the 'New Thought' through faith, practice and persistency. We cannot jump into the arena of thought and become strong men by any short road across lots. There is manifestly too much credulity doing business in the 'New Thought' movement. We cannot afford to be identified with the 'gold brick,' 'bunco,' and 'shell game' of mental evolution."

A Dialogue on Diet.

"TYPOCULTURISTS" is the name of a little volume by Mary Eupha Crawford. It is in the shape of a discussion on diet and other phases of hygiene between two persons designated "Crito" and "The Sophist." In her introduction the author says:

"Both characters of the dialogue express a portion of the experience and past and present mode of reasoning, of an erstwhile invalid, who daily realizes more health and enlargement of the reservoirs of vitality from living in harmony with nature's simple ways."

There are some good things in the book, but nothing particularly original. The increasing number of such publications shows how interest in the subject of hygiene is spreading among the people. Published by the Broadway Publishing Company, 835 Broadway, New York.

THIS ACCIDENT OCCURRED JAN. 7TH, 1903, AT 124 WEST FOURTH ST., LOS ANGELES.

Listen, O people, and you shall hear
Of the dire disaster of Vacy Steer.

Her snug little store all bustle and life
In the center of town, is well known to your wife.

When they builded next door a house, twelve stories tall,
Hers needed a prop, in the shape of a wall.

And a lot of wise men came into her store
And said, "We can make this place strong, and safe, to be sure."

So they built a prop for it, a wall of red brick
And then undermined it, and down it fell quick.

Aye, down did it fall, and great was the smash,
Taking creams, wigs and powders, and even the cash.

These wise heads assured her, there was no danger at all
To be feared from the digging under this new, green wall.

But out smashed the side of Vacy Steer's store,
And one of the ladies lay sprawled on the floor.

All ran from the place, in a terrible rush,
The frightened cat's tail was like a big brush.

While others escaped, at the very first scare,
Vacy Steer stood her ground, her duty was there.

Oh what can repay for the patience and grit,
Now all shattered and gone? That unfortunate pit!

And now, after twelve months of worry and woe,
Vacy Steer still is ready, for friend or for foe.

Come, and look in, at the same little store;
'Tis on Fourth Street near Spring, No. 124.

Japanese Army Suicides.

CASES OF HARAKIRI SINCE THE OPENING OF THE WAR.

INCIDENTS WHICH SHOW THE PROCLIVITY TOWARD SELF-DESTRUCTION, AND POINT OUT THE FACT THAT JAPANESE SOLDIERS WILL NOT BE TAKEN PRISONERS.

Will Livington Comfort.
(With Japanese army.)

AS a race of suicides, the Japanese are unparalleled at the present time; although it is claimed by the better classes that the day of the harakiri, or honorable self-slaughter, is past. The military portion of the empire is especially susceptible, as the following incidents brought about directly by the war, will show:

In the early days of the struggle, an order reached the military headquarters at Aomori, in northern Japan, to prepare to take the field. A very small portion of the garrison was to be left behind to keep up the military department. One young lieutenant, named Saguya, was chosen to command the small party remaining.

Saguya received the command valiantly. He took upon himself the character of host during the few days that were left, provided all manner of diversions for the departing troops, gave a last dinner to his fellow lieutenants, in which he was the life of the gathering.

In a short speech before the banquet broke up he delivered an eloquent toast to the future of the command, foretelling triumphant marches, splendid victories, and (his voice was shaken a little) spoke of the heroes returning home in glory. With his head bowed down, he ended by saying that he had hoped to go, but that it was not the will of the Emperor. "They also serve who stand and wait," he repeated brokenly.

Saguya accompanied the regiment to the port of embarkation and was the first and last to yell "Bonzai! Bonzai!"

Upon returning to the fort, the lieutenant went directly to his quarters. The next morning his orderly found him lying upon the matting, his abdomen rent backward and forward in the hideous fashion of the harakiri! And the short sword of the harakiri had been returned to its scabbard after its task was done!

It is plain from the words of Saguya at the banquet that he saw the better way; that he understood the necessity of somebody remaining to perpetuate the garrison at Aomori—that his detention was only luck and no reflection upon his valor—but the blood of the ancient Samurai was strong within him, and triumphed against his better knowledge.

About the middle of March several valuable horses belonging to one of the Tokio forts broke from their pickets and fell into the moat surrounding the grounds. The beasts were unable to extricate themselves from the mire and water, and, falling at length from exhaustion, were drowned. Their bodies were discovered the next morning.

Upon being informed of the accident, the commander sent for the Viscount, Capt. Yamanochi, who was directly in charge of the horses and provisions. This officer was not to be found about the fort. A messenger was dispatched at once to his home, but the Viscountess had not seen her husband since the day before. She became alarmed, and returned with the messenger to the fort.

Several hours passed and the mystery was not cleared until late in the afternoon, when a private soldier ran into headquarters with the intelligence that the body of Capt. Yamanochi had been found in a remote portion of the fort property, back of the firing grounds. A revolver with one empty chamber lay upon the turf beside the dead man, and two open letters were in his pocket.

The first was addressed to the commander. It was couched with formal dignity. The captain begged to report that through his negligence the horses had broken loose and destroyed themselves. He had therefore proved unforgivably remiss in his duty and could no longer exist. The commander was informed that the broken heart of the unworthy officer was, however, with his regiment in the last moments, and the last prayer before he died was for the great honor and welfare of the beloved command in the coming campaigns against the Russians.

The second letter was addressed to the Viscountess, and was a dying man's assurance of love.

Capt. Yamanochi was a man of distinguished family, character and education. His personal courage had been proved. He was beloved by his fellow officers and by his men. He was accounted a broad man among the Japanese; and his death, weak and pitiable as it appears from the standpoint of an American, was regarded, deep in the minds of his contemporaries, as unfortunate, but proper—sad, but fitting.

And here we are confronted with the astonishing lack of the sense of humor in the Japanese people. An American who proved careless enough to lose a few horses would be disturbed for a few days, until the bumps ceased coming in from his superiors. After that he would set about to repair the matter by better service. On the contrary, the Japanese would not commit suicide because of financial troubles, wherein he is above the American. The former quails most of all before that large, delicate thing which he calls his honor!

The story has been told, perhaps, of the officer of high rank, who was in charge of military instruction in Peking. When war became a fact he was one of the first to apply for an active command. He was refused because his services in Peking were both timely and efficient.

He was able to realize from the denial nothing but shame—either would not or could not see that his especial aptness in a certain line was responsible for his being held back. He killed himself in the same horrible manner as Saguya; and the result was that the Emperor had to weaken another department to fill his place. The great body of the Japanese people see honor in such an act, but no selfishness.

A Japanese boy walked a great distance from the interior and presented himself at a recruiting office here. Either from inherent frailty or from the exhaustion which followed his long journey, he was pronounced unfit for service. He was seized, as one of the native papers states, with a terrible anger toward himself; and within sight of the recruiting office pierced his abdomen again and again with a blunt knife until he fell.

There are many of these stories. And many similar and useless sacrifices occur without reaching the public eye. Acquaintances ask what has become of such a one. Sometimes they learn, but more often there is no answer. The Japanese government keeps such matters secret when possible, lest suicide become a contagion as in olden days, and fighting blood be depleted.

One of the most crucial moments in the history of the empire occurred ten years ago, when the Triple Alliance dictated to Japan and thrust aside the fruits of the conquering of the Chinese. The Emperor had returned to the capital from Hiroshima, where he had personally directed the campaigns of the war. It is said that a hundred thousand people assembled along the way where the imperial carriage was to pass. Mingled with the crowd in great numbers were the Samurai, the military class which would have arrayed itself with joyful heart against the Triple Alliance or all the world—rather than to submit to a victory without the trophies of conquest.

It is a known fact that the Emperor dared not look out of his carriage, lest at the sight of his face the more impulsive element of the Samurai would slay themselves—because wisdom had prevailed and they were not allowed to contend at that time against the combined powers.

Infinite generations have inculcated in the Japanese mind a capacity for the last desperate act of man—brought him close up to the possibility of it; the glamor of honor has made it easy to embrace, and the hereafter self-achieved allures rather than restrains.

And the point of all this is that in the coming land campaigns toward Harbin, Port Arthur, Vladivostok, or wherever else a Japanese column may beat its way—there will be few, if any, prisoners taken by the Russians. The Jap will keep his last blade and his last pound of strength for himself. . . . I was reading the news of the day recently with a young Japanese gentleman, a student of the Imperial university. We encountered an item to the effect that a Japanese hospital ship was carrying twenty-two wounded Russians from Chemulpo to the Red Cross establishment at Matsuyama.

"Bah!" muttered my companion, "the Russians won't be hampered by any of our wounded. Rely upon that!"

THE GOOD-LOOKING MINISTER.

A collection of portraits of "prominent American clergymen" lies before us. Perhaps that is not the only way in which it lies; yet we are constrained to suppose that, as the portraits are mainly half-tone reproductions of photographs, they are reasonably faithful to the appearance of the originals. In several cases that we can vouch for they do not flatter, but rather the reverse. What sort of a story do they tell of the looks of the popular American clergyman of the day?

He is good-looking, most assuredly. Somewhat too good-loking, we should say. Turning from page to page of this manual, we begin to sigh for the rugged countenance of a good, old-fashioned dominie, of the sort who reconciled the faithful and inspiring service of God with a very homely countenance. This man whose smooth lineaments we see repeated from page to page is too soft, too gently smiling by half. He is too fair and flattering a proposition. He looks like a man who cajoles rather than stimulates the understanding; whose mission is to flatter rather than rebuke, to hypnotize rather than vitalize.

How are we to account for this abounding pulchritude in the American pulpit at the present day? Can it be possible that preachers are chosen, in some part at least, for their good looks? Is a sort of competition in comeliness, in a grace not alone of the spiritual sort, going on in the world of the churches? Not to the suppression of other qualities, we may be sure. These good-looking ministers are good preachers and good men. Yet we should not want the beautifying process to go much further.—[New York Mail.

VIEWED MERELY AS A PASTIME.

The man from Chicago looked with some scorn at the Brambleville ticket agent as he handed out a dollar bill and pushed it through the opening.

"You've got a pretty lot of citizens to allow themselves to be charged at the rate of 5 cents a mile from here to Bushby on a miserable little crawling one-horse branch road," he said, bitingly.

The ticket agent looked at him with a calmness which nothing could disturb.

"I'd like to call your attention to one fact before you go on usin' any more language," he said, mildly, "and that is that while it may be 5 cents a mile, it's only 35 cents an hour."—[Youths' Companion.

A CONFUSION OF TERMS.

Horace T. Eastman, the inventor of the locomotive pilot, said the other day:

"This morning I was sitting in a drug store waiting to get a prescription filled when a young Irishman entered.

"The Irishman pointed to a stack of green castile soap and said:

" 'Oi want a loomp o' thot.'

" 'Very well, sir,' said the clerk. 'Will you have it scented or unscented?'

" 'Oi'll take ut with me,' said the Irishman."—[New York Tribune.

PUZZLE SOLUTIONS.

NAMES OF WINNERS OF PRIZES OFFERED TWO WEEKS AGO.

Solution to Patriotic Puzzle.

Many succeeded by various ingenious tricks in producing a 13-stripe flag, but few compared favorably with the correct solution given below, which shows how the result may be obtained in a perfectly fair and simple manner without discarding pieces or lapping over, such devices as many resorted to.

A diagonal series of steps cuts the flag into two pieces, so that the lower half raised forward fits perfectly in the new position and presents the proper flag in all its glory.

The five $1 prizes for the best solutions are awarded as follows:

Jennie Wiggins, 3807 K street, San Diego.
Hattie Gertz, 2309 South Grand avenue, city.
J. A. DeMuth, 772 Hemlock street, city.
Edgar E. Livermore, 227 North Broadway, city.
Lance Lewis, 1730 Reed street, city.

Solution to Chinese Donation Puzzle.

Many of our puzzleists succeeded in locating the hidden motto of the young people's heathen mission box and exposing Harry and his sister as a pair of little jokers, for as working agents of the charity the sentiment contained in the motto is, to say the least, audacious.

"A fool and his money soon part," is the startling sentence which works out according to the rules of the cryptogram—passing from one letter to another and starting from the upper left hand corner.

After taking into consideration all possible points of merit, such as neatness, clearness, etc., the following Solons are selected as deserving of the five $1 prizes:

Miriam Joy Lewis, 2315 Leoti avenue, city.
Joseph McCarthy, 2600 Michigan avenue, city.
Walter Palmer, 134 North Avenue 24, city.
Nellie Littlefield, Escondido, Cal.
Hardy Harris, Monrovia, Cal.

THE CHILD OF DREAMS.

HE NEEDS JUDICIOUS, TACTFUL TRAINING FOR HIS RIGHTFUL DEVELOPMENT.

By a Special Contributor.

With many people a good child is one that makes no demands upon their attention, no noise to disturb them, and is never under foot. One, in fact, who will amuse himself by the hour, or sit all day poring over a book. The wise, however, know that a quiet child is not necessarily a good child, and that one who is reading, even if it be a good book, is not always profitably employed; for it is not what is in a book, but what the child gets out of it that is of moment.

What are the thoughts it is presenting to him? What ideas of life is he forming? What principles is he extracting, to be acted upon in future years? These are the vital questions. Or is he only passing the time, making reading an excuse for not being actively employed? If so, he is not reading, but merely indulging in a form of day-dreaming, a habit as pernicious as cigarette smoking.

The child is living in an imaginary world, whether the book itself be fact or fiction, because it is one in which his personality plays no part; his powers and limitations do not influence the current of events; and such a life unfits one for reality. Real children cease to be pleasing companions, they are constantly overturning some of his unconsciously formed estimates of himself. To them he is not the hero that he is in his dreamland, where he identifies himself with the men of mighty deeds. Effort also becomes distasteful to him, for the results are so unsatisfactory compared with the brilliant successes and moral and physical victories so easily attained in the theater of his mind. His companions, in their turn, finding him queer and unattractive, shun his society, and thus the gulf is widened. More and more the child withdraws himself into his dream-world and loses the development of mind and character which comes from intercourse with others and rude contact with those stubborn things called facts.

But how few parents and guardians stop to consider this. The child is "so good," you know, "so little trouble," "so fond of his books." Then, when the child, growing up, fails to take hold of life with a firm grip, seizing his place in the world and holding it against all comers, they wonder at the failure of early promise, not realizing that his formative period has been spent in a way that unfitted rather than fitted him for life.

The tendency to live in a world of thought, rather than in the world of the commonplace, may, however, by wise direction, become a power in action rather than a habit sapping all action.

The first step is to gain an entrance into this dream-land, to learn how it is peopled and where its dangers lie. This can be accomplished only by judicious and persistent questioning, although a little gentle ridicule, when the dreamer fails to bring out clearly the charm his books have for him, will go far to change dreaming into thinking. It must be, however, the ridicule that spurs but does not wound.

A feigned misunderstanding of the child's meaning trains him to a better use of words, and each effort to make himself understood gives him a clearer knowledge of the thought itself. Yet too often the adults, carried away by their own wit, continue to misunderstand, even when the words used are the best that could be chosen, and so the golden opportunity is lost in mere buffoonery.

When the child has learned to reproduce in words what he reads or thinks, and has formed the habit of doing so, it is easy to lead him on to acts.

Teach him the analogy between great deeds and little things. Is his imagination fired by some soldier's deeds of valor, show him that the endurance of a forced march is but the elder brother of the perseverance that keeps on weeding the garden after the back is weary, or sticking at a troublesome sum in spite of an aching head. Point out htat the underlying qualities of his hero detective are a quick wit, close observation, and prudence in speech—qualities that may well be practiced every day in the humblest child world.

A dreamy child should always be encouraged to make practical experiments in whatever holds his imagination at the moment. It is good for the dreamer to know just how much digging goes to the making of a garden, and how many eggs are apt to addle in the hatching. Such knowledge, acquired early, impresses him with the difference between things on paper and off of paper, and sends him out into the world a little less of a sheep among wolves.

But whether the children are dreamers or active, wide-awake little bodies, it can never be amiss to encourage them to talk about what they think and read, as well as of what they do, and the habit, once formed, will continue with them well into manhood and womanhood, forming a safeguard not to be despised.

In these busy days, it is impossible for a mother to read and judge of every book before her children are allowed to read it, but there is always time to talk over with them the books they have read. And to point out the fallacies and falsehoods in a book, its crudities and distortions of life, shields the growing youth better than the bar of "Thou shalt not." Often the mere attempt to tell the story they have read in their own words reveals to them its shallowness or unsuspected evil.

A NAVAL HERO'S EVICTION.

INCIDENT TO THE CLEANING UP OF THE ACADEMY GROUNDS AT ANNAPOLIS.

[New York Times:] It was generally believed that when Mrs. John C. Kealy was induced to leave her former home in the latest addition to the naval academy grounds, the last private citizen had departed from that area, and that the United States government had full swing to carry on its improvements. This, however, is not the case, for a little hovel inside the academy walls is still occupied by another Annapolis notable, John Jackson, although arrangements have been completed by which he will move to other quarters within a few days.

The man, John Jackson, who is still a tenant by sufferance on the grounds of the academy, although not reduced by the lowest depths of poverty, was a United States sailor during the Civil War, and performed a feat of splendid daring and courage, which was recognized by the government and a medal commemorative of it bestowed upon him.

The feat took place during the blockade of Charleston, S. C., by the Federal fleet. Some United States vessels, the largest of which was the Miantonomoh, upon which Jackson was a sailor, had crossed the bar into the harbor, and could only retrace their course by the same narrow channel by which they had come. The Confederates in the shore batteries discovered this, and as the tide was at a flood, they launched three torpedoes, chained together, so as to float down on the Federal ships and destroy them. The torpedoes were the kind which exploded on contact with some object. Jackson volunteered to swim toward the torpedos and unscrew the cap which was intended to explode them. This feat he accomplished, though with the greatest danger of meeting his death from a premature explosion or from the shots of the Confederates. To accomplish it he was forced to dive and do a part of the work under water.

Jackson is a fisherman, but not a prosperous or thrifty one, and he is now entirely without resources. When the order came for the removal of the families in the district annexed to the acamedy he took possession of a small shed which was in the yard of the home of John Frank, and has been there ever since. He has not attempted to defy the authorities, but has simply remained because he has had no place to go to, and the authorities, knowing his history, have not had the heart to compel him to go. Now, however, it is imperatively necessary that the ground be cleared, so that the work can progress, and other arrangements have been made for Jackson.

Through the generosity of a number of naval officers, among whom are Commandant of Midshipmen Charles J. Badger and Chaplain H. H. Clark, a sum has been subscribed sufficient to build a small but comfortable home for Jackson, which will be placed at the foot of South street and turned over to him for his lifetime. The permit has been issued for this building, and the work of construction has begun.

WHEN A GIRL IS TWENTY-NINE.

The hurrying months are passing,
  Another birthday near!
And some one is lamenting
  In secret, so I hear.
The idle gossips whisper
  That it is much too late
  To hope for any miracle to save an old maid's fate.
What base insinuation!
  What falsehood, line on line!
  For lots of nice things happen when a girl is twenty-nine.

"Young things" may still be pretty,
  No doubt. Yet critics state
They're really quite old-fashioned
  And somewhat out of date.
Our dramas, poems and novels,
  As anyone can see,
  Have relegated "sweet sixteens" to tales of ancestry.
If heroines are older,
  It's certainly a sign
  That lots of things may happen when a girl's "sweet twenty-nine."

So do not grow too wistful
  O'er long-forgotten teens,
With sighs of retrospection
  For whispered might-have-beens
But if you smile as sweetly
  As then, and are as coy,
  And never show that you prefer a graybeard to a boy;
In short, if you're your own true self,
  You'll never have to pine!
  For everything can happen when a girl is twenty-nine.

THE WORLD'S NEW SHIPS.

According to the annual report of Lloyds Register, the total number of vessels, exclusive of warships, launched in Great Britain during the past year was 697, of 1,190,618 gross tons. Of these 632 were steamers. Elsewhere 549 steamers of 798,285 tons and 404 sailing vessels of 156,808 tons were launched, in addition to 78 war vessels of 239,210 tons displacement. The new tonnage in the United States was 382,000, in Germany 184,000, and in France 92,000.

In Great Britain the sailing tonnage decreased by about 92,000 tons, while the steam tonnage increased by 497,000. Of the tonnage launched in Great Britain 99½ per cent. was steel. A feature of the French shipbuilding is the abandonment of the construction of large sailing vessels.

The wreck returns for the year show that the tonnage of all nationalities totally lost, broken up, etc., amounts to about 744,000 tons, of which 419,000 was steam tonnage. The net increase of the world's mercantile tonnage during 1903 was about 1,402,000 tons.—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

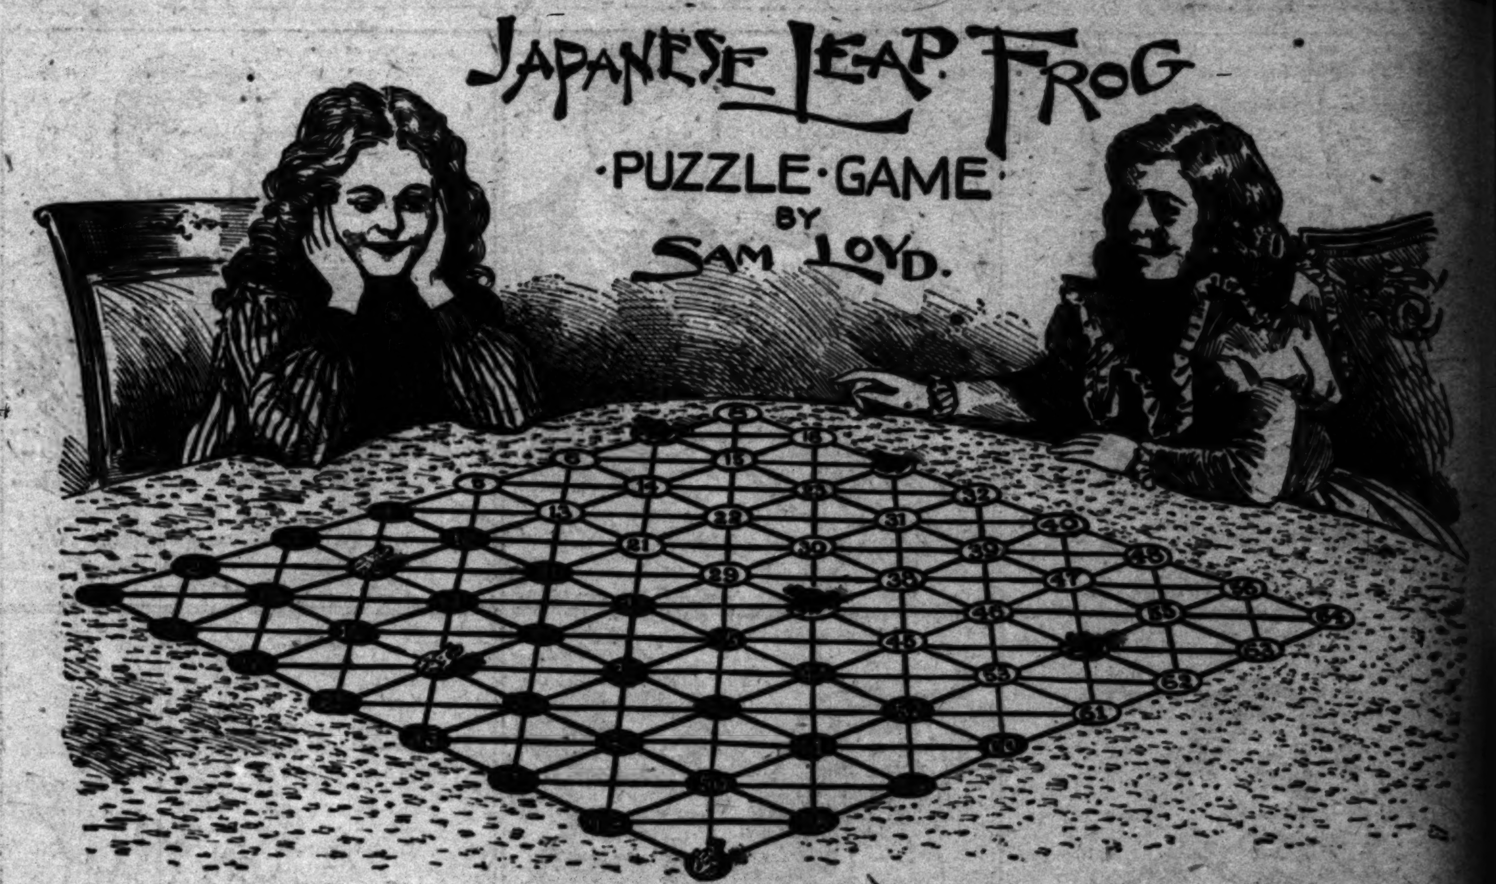
JAPANESE LEAP FROG PUZZLE GAME

BY SAM LOYD.



CAN YOU MAKE THESE FROGS JUMP?—Here is a puzzle game which everybody can do in more or less moves, but as the prizes are offered for the sho method, exceptional opportunities are given for the display of ingenuity and patience. All you have to do is to get this little company of trained frogs into their pr places. The black frogs, which are on the white spots, must be moved over to the black spots, and the white frogs onto the white ones. A frog can go any distance in direction in a straight line, so long as he follows the lines which connect the spots together. It is not necessary to play white and black frogs in turn—it is pur matter of moving them along the lines so as to change the colors of the spots in the fewest possible number of moves.

There is but one stipulation or rule of the game, and that is where the fun comes in. When it is played as a game one fellow does all the playing and the fellow does the watching. You must move quickly whenever he tells you to do so, and if you do not move before he counts ten deliberately, you have lost the move he takes command of the frogs and you become the watcher. The real point of the watching, however, consists in seeing that you do not place a frog where any frog could jump onto it, when the watcher calls "dead frog" and he takes charge of the moving. If there is a party of players, anyone who calls "dead frog" the management of the frogs, and the other players worry him on to play quickly, so he will make blunders and place the frogs on spots where the other frogs jump onto them.

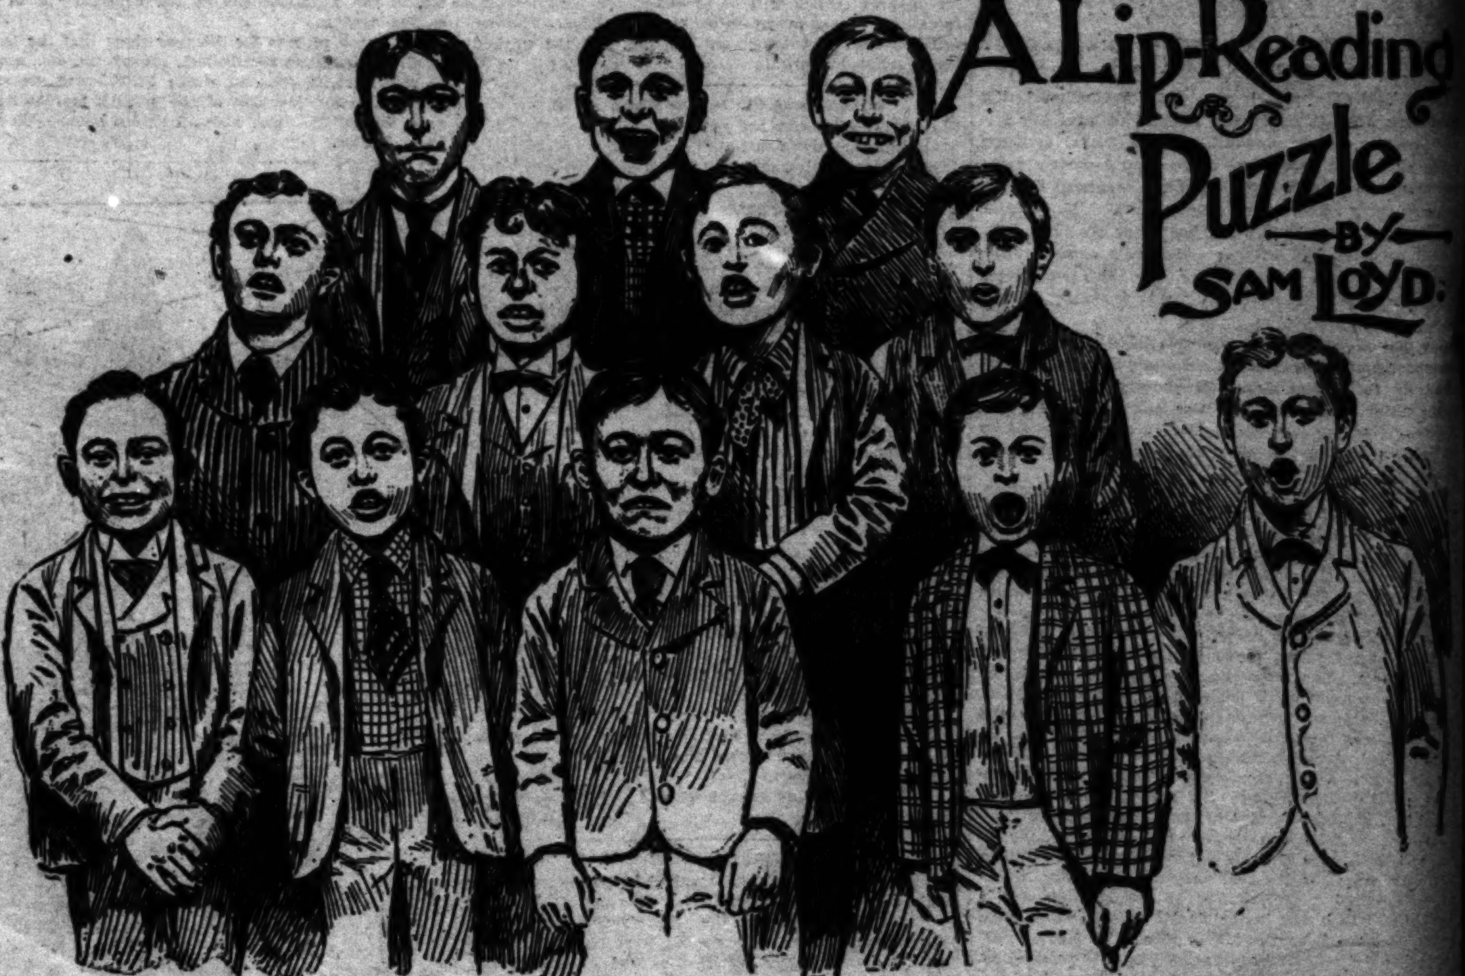
Of course, there is a sure and easy way to get the frogs across so that no frog may be taken by another one of either color, but the problem is to tell just how moves are required to perform the feat.

As it is given in the picture, the frogs all stand on safe places where they cannot be touched, and it will be seen that there are but two or three safe moves can be made. The spots are all numbered to facilitate the writing out of answers. In sending solutions, correspondents should first state what they claim, viz: "I form the trick in thirty moves, as follows:"

Five one-dollar prizes will be awarded for best solutions sent to PUZZLE EDITOR, Los Angeles Juvenile Times.

A Lip-Reading Puzzle

BY SAM LOYD.



A LIP READING PUZZLE—So much has been said about the wonderful powers of teaching the deaf and dumb to carry on a wordless conversation by read interpreting the motion of the lips, that I propose to introduce a startling puzzle, which I am sure will at first appear incredible. Here is a class of a dozen boys, being called up to give their names were photographed by the instantaneous process just as each one was commencing to pronounce his own name.

The twelve names were Oom, Alden, Eastman, Alfred, Arthur, Luke, Fletcher, Matthew, Theodore, Richard, Shermer and Hisswold. Now it would not possible to be able to give the correct name to each of the twelve boys, but if you will practice the list over to each one, you will find it not a difficult task to proper name for every one of the boys.

Five prizes of one dollar each will be awarded among those sending the best answers to Puzzle Editor, Los Angeles Juvenile Times.

THE BOY RANGERS.

ADVENTURES OF TWO CALIFORNIA BOY'S ON A HUNTING EXPEDITION.

Contributed by Solon Lauer.

It was about sunset, on the day after the arrival of the rescue party, though Ned in the recess of the tunnel knew nothing of the time, when the two outlaws, going near to the doorway, held a discussion in low tones. Ned pretended to be asleep, but his alert ears caught a few words of the conversation. The outlaws were agreed as to the necessity for abandoning their retreat. They differed, however, as to the disposition of their captive. Tony was for putting a bullet into him, and leaving his body in the tunnel. Jim, however, did not favor this summary method. He preferred that Jack should take the responsibility of deciding the fate of their captive; and furthermore, he hinted at the possibility of ransom money.

"Might as well git something fer the kid," he said, "as to throw him away." This argument had more weight with Tony than any other, and at length he agreed to Jim's plan. It was then decided that they should make their departure that evening, taking with them such valuables as they could carry, along with their prisoner.

"I'm afraid we've waited too long, now," said Jim; may be a dozen deputies in the cañon by this Seizing left hand his sheath knife from the bundle where he had laid it after cutting a piece of rope, the outlaw sprang with a savage oath toward Ned, who lay bound on one of the rude beds. Raising the knife, he was about to plunge it into the heart of his victim, who was helpless to save himself, when Bland fired again. This time his bullet struck the unlifted hand of the robber, wounding two of his fingers, and shattering the handle of the knife, which dropped jingling upon the stones. Then, realizing the futility of further resistance, the outlaw called out for quarter.

By this time Mr. Smith was scrambling up the stony incline, to the mouth of the tunnel, and in a few seconds was inside, where he saw at once that his services were not needed.

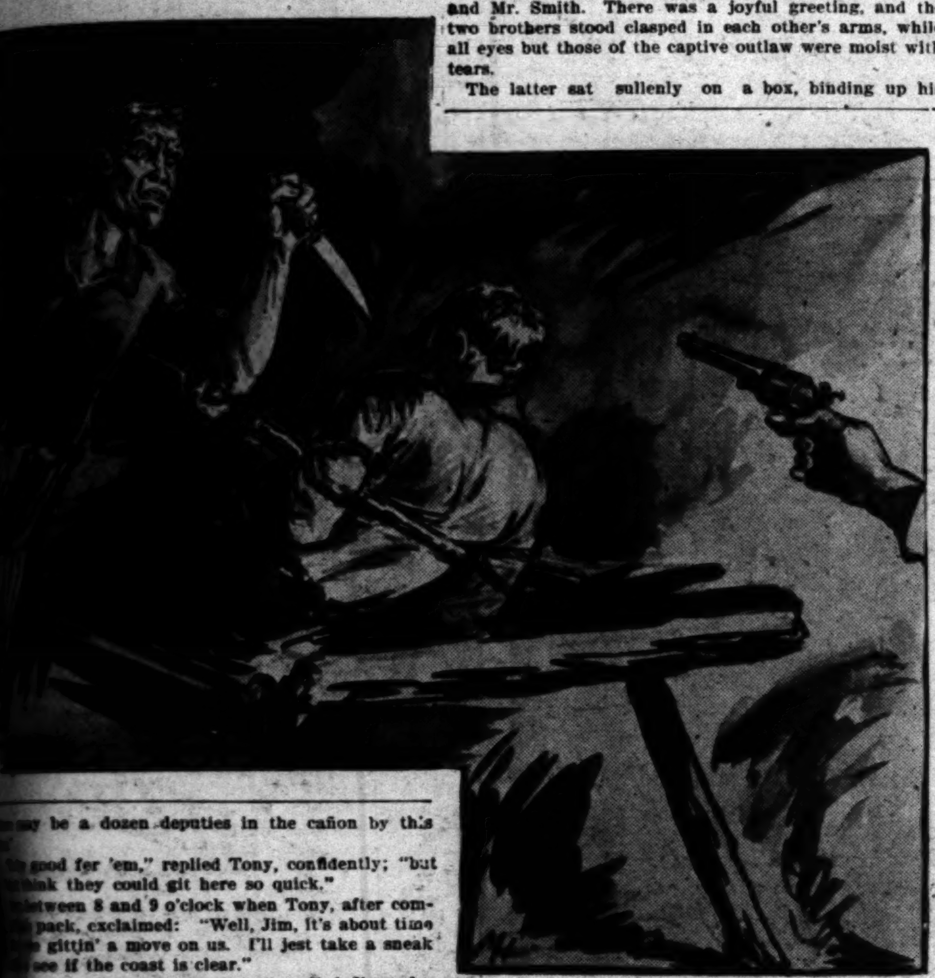
Meantime there was unexpected trouble outside. While Harry was drawing from his pocket a piece of cord with which to bind the hands of the outlaw Tony, that worthy individual, regained his senses. Before Harry could lift a finger, he had rolled swiftly over several times, and, leaping to his feet, dashed off down the trail, followed by a bullet from Harry's revolver, which in the darkness flew wide of its mark.

As Harry started after him, he heard shots from Ben and John, and then the rattling of stones in the bed of the cañon as they rushed after the outlaw.

Harry, thinking that he might be of some service in the tunnel, hastened back up the trail, deeply chagrined over the escape of Tony.

As he entered the den of the outlaws, he was rejoiced to find Ned sitting on a box, chatting with Mr. Bland and Mr. Smith. There was a joyful greeting, and the two brothers stood clasped in each other's arms, while all eyes but those of the captive outlaw were moist with tears.

The latter sat sullenly on a box, binding up his wounded hand, in which he was soon assisted by Bland.



"Sorry to have been obliged to shoot," exclaimed Bland.

"Oh, I ain't much hurt," replied Jim; "the shoulder's the worst."

On examining that wound, Bland found that no bones were broken. The ball had passed through the thick muscles, temporarily disabling the arm. He soon dressed it, and the outlaw lay down on one of the beds.

While the party were engaged in exchanging experiences, they heard a rattling on the stony slope outside, and in a moment John and Ben pushed into the tunnel.

"Well!" exclaimed Ben, "our game got away from us; but I see you have got your man. Ned, it does my eyes good to see you unhurt."

Then Ben, naturally less demonstrative than his two brothers, stood gazing fondly at Ned.

"It was a close call," said Ned.

"Well," said Ben, "I suppose we may as well stop here tonight with our friend Jim. Tony seemed to prefer solitude to our company. I guess there's no use of our trying to follow him, at present. What do you think, Mr. Bland?"

"Oh, I guess he's given us the slip this time. We'll have to content ourselves with Jim's company."

"It's valuable," said Harry, significantly, thinking of the reward promised for his capture.

"And he, or the gang, has some valuable personal property," added Ned. "Suppose we investigate."

At these words Jim, who had pretended to be sound asleep, even emitting an occasional snore, groaned and rose on his elbow, looking fiercely at Ned. His heart was full of hatred and rage. His pack lay on the floor of the tunnel, where he was tying it up when surprised by Bland.

"There are valuables in his pack, there," said Ned, pointing to it as he spoke.

Harry pounced upon it, slashing the rope with his sheath knife, and on opening it, he found, among other things, a roll of greenbacks, and a small shot bag containing a quantity of gold coin.

As Harry brought these forth, the company eagerly drew around him, Mr. Bland setting the two candles on a box so that they could see clearly to count the money. When it had been carefully counted, they found that it amounted to over a thousand dollars in greenbacks, and $355 in gold.

"Whew!" exclaimed Ben, when the total was announced. "Jim," you were pretty well fixed, for a prospector."

Jim's only reply was a dismal groan.

"Say!" exclaimed Harry suddenly; "Tony forgot his pack when he left me so suddenly. It is still out there, unless he came back after it."

Jumping up, he darted out of the tunnel, and soon returned, bringing the pack. It was speedily opened, and found to contain a quantity of greenbacks, rolled up in an old handkerchief, and some jewelry, wrapped in paper and tucked into a stocking.

When the greenbacks were counted it was found that they amounted to $1740, mostly in tens and twenties.

"This certainly was a paying mine," exclaimed Ned, laughing, and the rest of the company joined in. "But suppose we work it a little on our own account. I think I can guarantee results. I dreamed one night that Tony and Jim buried something of value right over there," said Ned, looking at Jim with a grin. "It is possible that I was not so soundly asleep as they thought. Let's have a look."

The expression on Jim's face was indescribable. He had been deeply chagrined and enraged at the capture of his pack and Tony's, but he had hoped that the buried treasure was safe. He now saw that Ned knew of its existence, and whereabouts. If his hands had not been bound, he doubtless would have attacked the whole company, in his desperation.

Following Ned's directions, the company soon unearthed a bundle, wrapped in an old gunny sack. It was heavy. On being taken to the light, and opened, it was found to contain a large quantity of gold and silver coin. This was eagerly distributed among the company, to hasten the work of counting.

When the sums counted by each had been added together by Ben, it was found that the precious bundle yielded a total of $6465.

"Say, boys," exclaimed Mr. Bland, "we struck it rich this time, sure enough."

"Over $9000, all together," remarked Mr. Smith.

The evening was now far spent, but none of the party had thought of sleep. For an hour or more, they prolonged their conversation. Then Ben, rising and stretching himself, remarked: "Well, fellows, we'd better turn in before long, for we have a long trip ahead of us tomorrow."

"That's right," exclaimed Mr. Smith; "but I say, we don't want to sleep in this den, do we? For my part, I like the open air better."

"Same here," exclaimed Mr. Bland. "I move we camp outside and take Jim with us. Guess you wouldn't take cold, would you, Jim?"

Jim only gave a snort of contempt in reply. He considered himself no tenderfoot.

So the party, taking Jim and the bundles of coin and bank notes, together with some blankets to cover their prisoner, made their way out of the tunnel. As they passed out into the pure sweet air, Ned drew a long breath.

"By jove! fellows, it seems good to get out of that place. I had begun to think I should never smell fresh air again."

Selecting a spot on the clean white sand of the cañon's bed, the party soon made camp for the night. Branches of trees and quantities of dry leaves were brought together, and blankets spread over them. A huge camp fire was made, for there was an abundance of fuel. A comfortable bed was prepared for Jim, who was bound securely and laid upon it, well covered with blankets. His wounds gave him pain, but he was too game a man to show any sign of it.

The night was divided into watches of two hours each, and a sentinel appointed for each watch. Then the whole party turned in, except John, who had the first watch. Silence fell upon the camp, broken only by the heavy breathing of some of the sleepers. The stars twinkled in the clear, crisp air, and now and then John heard the sound of some night bird seeking its prey. The fire blazed cheerfully, replenished now and then by John, who had collected a great pile of dry wood.

The two hours of John's watch soon passed, and, waking Mr. Bland, he rolled himself in his blankets, and was soon sound asleep.

Thus the night passed away, and at break of day the camp was astir, busy with preparations for departure.

Packs were made up, the two burros were brought up and loaded, and by 9 o'clock the whole company was moving down the trail, with the outlaw Jim under guard. In due time, with no mishap, they arrived at Pine Lodge. Here the three brothers decided to stop, leaving to Mr. Bland the responsible task of delivering the captive outlaw to the authorities in Los Angeles.

After a night's rest and refreshment at the lodge, Mr. Bland, Mr. Smith, his son John, and the outlaw started down the trail for Buena Vista, the three boys going a short distance with them. Fond farewells were exchanged, and then the party separated. With many glances back at their departing friends, as they threaded their way along the winding trail, the boys slowly returned to their lodge.

Here they proceeded to stow away their possessions, and restore order in their little home.

In a few days they had resumed their former quiet mode of life; but as they sat by their huge fireplace on the long winter evenings, they discussed many plans for the future.

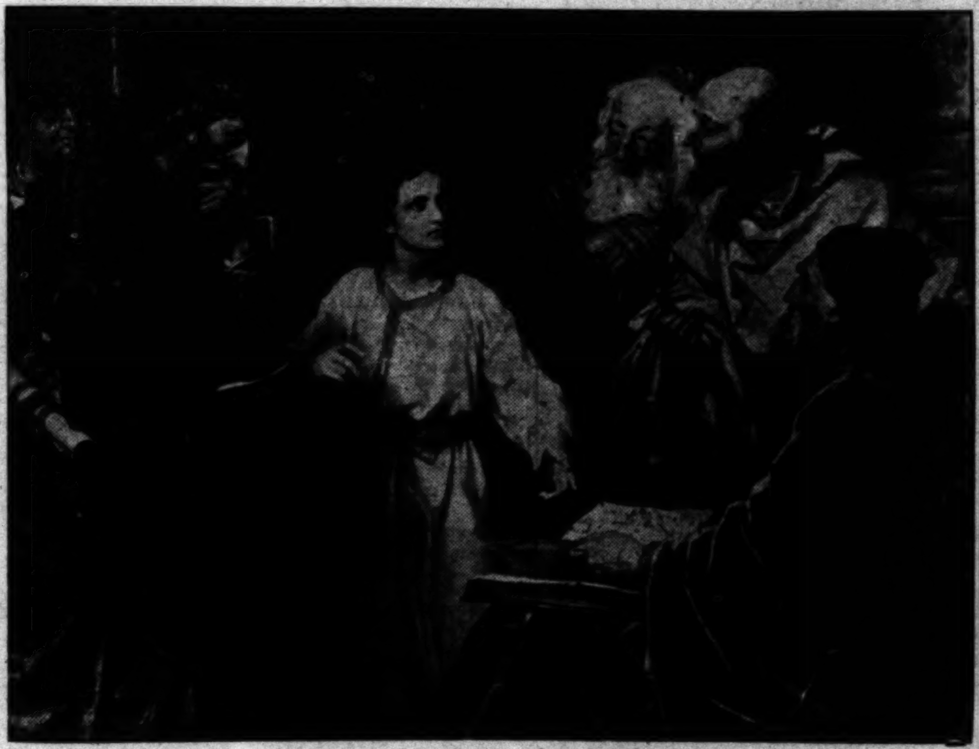
CHRIST IN THE TEMPLE.

A FAMOUS MODERN PAINTING BY THE GERMAN ARTIST, HEINRICH HOFFMAN.

This is a picture that tells a story, and it is a story familiar to most of us. One of the few incidents in the life of the boy Christ mentioned in the Bible is the visit to the temple at Jerusalem which He made with His parents when He was 12 years old. This was His first visit to Jerusalem, for His home was in the little village of Nazareth. Among the lower hills of Galilee, just before they descend in steep cliffs upon the plain of Esdraelon, a little hollow is formed, and on the northwestern slopes lies the village of Nazareth. The houses of white limestone rise out of the green of fruit trees, olives, vineyards and cactus, and it is one of the cleanest and prettiest towns in Palestine. Of the many hills around it, one, higher than the rest, to the north, is climbed by every boy, and from its summit may be seen the nearer villages, the mountains of Samaria, the edge of the Gilead plain beyond the Jordan, and, far away in the northeastern sky, the snowy top of Mount Hermon.

There were passing troops through the village, royal messengers, great merchant caravans, and splendid embassies of Rome, to keep them in touch with the great world outside, and, in such surroundings, Jesus grew up.

Taught at home, and in the village school at 5, He would begin to read the Scriptures; at 10 to study the law; at 13 He would know the commandments, and become a member of the congregation. He may have learned some Greek and Latin, but He spoke Aramaic, the language of the common people, just as now Arabic is the language of the common people. Here He learned to shape the rude tools used in those days, the plow, the yoke, the fan, and to work at the carpenter's bench. We can think of Him in the still evenings and in the early mornings, before Mount Hermon had begun to glow with the splendors of the sunrise, wandering over these rocky hills, for He always loved the mountains, and growing in stature and in grace.



CHRIST IN THE TEMPLE BY HOFFMAN.

His parents went every year to Jerusalem at the feast of the passover. At 12 He was old enough, according to the custom, to go with them for the first time; a great event in the life of a Jewish boy. The feast over, they started homeward. Pilgrims returning northward from Jerusalem usually start late in the day, and a town some nine miles distant, near Bethel, is a common halting-place the first night. There were a number of kinsfolk and friends in the caravan, and, supposing the boy to have been with them, Joseph and Mary did not seek Him until they had made this stop for the night. With what fear they retraced their steps, looking for Him, while they thought of the beasts of prey and of fierce men, brigands, who infested the country. When at last after three days they found Him in the temple, His first words were: "Know ye not that I must be in my Father's house?" And they did not understand, but they were amazed to hear Him talking with the learned men, both hearing them and asking questions.

It is this incident that the artist has seen fit to set forth for us.

The ideal beauty of the boy Christ in this picture is beyond description, yet there is nothing unreal about him; he looks like a boy whom we would love to know, and would certainly love if we did know him. The graceful figure, the thoughtful brow, the perfect head, the wisdom and fire of the eyes, and the delicate features may all be shown in engravings, but the clear purity of the complexion, and the singular radiance that comes from the figure cannot be reproduced.

The coloring is very fine, for Mr. Hoffman seems to be master of all the tints discovered by modern art, and the old masters knew nothing of many of these tones of color. The man at the left leaning one elbow on the reading stand wears a robe of violet-red, and a mantle of dark green with a tinge of blue in the coloring. The head of the man just behind him is covered with an end of his brown mantle, below which is seen a little of his dark gold tunic. The seated sage wears a velvet mantle of a deep old-rose hue, the philosopher leaning one hand on the back of his chair wears a robe of striking green, and that of the hoary patriarch in the center, who leans upon a staff, and listens with such a shrewd, calculating air is a subdued tone of ashes-of-roses. The robe of the wonderful boy is spotless white, with a delicate oriental tracery, and about His waist a girdle of Syrian weave and dye.

Now imagine the coloring. The deep old-rose against the striking green, with the background of pinkish-gray, or ashes-of-roses. Then the white in the center with its oriental pattern and soft bright color in the band and girdle. These colors are all warm, as if they caught a reflected light from the central figure. On the other side the bluish-green and dark brown, with a touch of dark gold and dark red. Do you see that the faces as well as the colors are darker, sterner, on this side? There is doubt here, and a sort of defiance, while the opposite figures are receptive; there seems to be more light in their minds as well as in their faces and garments.

Almost all oriental people talk with their hands, and in this picture the hands play an important part. The boy, in whom all the light of the picture seems to center, or, better, from whom all the light seems to emanate, says with that beautiful hand outstretched toward the book held in the lap of the learned doctor sitting in the foreground, "It is written on those very pages." There is no argument, no passion, but calm, dignified reference to the law, back of which they cannot go, the very word which these gray-haired men have spent their lives studying. Now this gesture alone would be too mature, it would detract from the beautiful boyhood depicted here, were this all; but, note the right hand. It rests lightly, and easily, with the arm in repose, but see the forefinger uplifted, as if He could hardly restrain His eagerness to convince them of the truth of His statement, an impulsive, boyish, natural motion.

The one seated, with the volume on his knees, holds the partly-turned leaf as a student would, carefully reverently, yet both hands say plainly: "I hold to the Word: if it is written here, I abide by it."

The one just behind him rests one hand on the back of his chair, as if signifying his intention to agree with him, and with the Word, but how certainly the right hand argues the point, not aggressively, but as if desiring only a clear understanding of the matter.

As for the aged man in the background, he has reached the borderland where so many things seem not worth argument, or, like this, seemingly beyond argument, and, with folded hands clasped one over the other on his staff, he rests, and waits the outcome of all the wonderful things this divine boy is telling.

Now mark the man at the opposite side. His right hand holds clasped the roll. The Jews wrote their books with ink on rolls of smoothed sheepskin or goatskin, with a staff attached to either end. The rolls were not written across, but from end to end, the writing being arranged in columns. When a roll was read, the beginning of it was in a reader's right hand, the end at his left. When a column had been read it was rolled round the right-hand staff and a new column was unrolled from the left-hand one. There was the synagogue roll, and the one for private reading; the roll which he holds is probably the latter. But the arm is akimbo, with the back of the hand on the hip, and the elbow turned forward, an aggressive position, an attitude naturally assumed by one who is thoroughly convinced that he is in the right, and ready to hold his own against any who would dispute him. But the left hand is yet more expressive. It covers the mouth, the natural gesture of one overtaken by surprise, and anxious to hide the fact; compelled against his wishes to acquiesce in the statements of the speaker, yet trying to find a loophole of escape. Despite his aggressive elbow, [illegible] feel that the man is almost persuaded that [illegible] acknowledge that this youthful expounder of the law speaks whereof He knows.

After you have looked at them all, how the [illegible] extended hand of the Christ dominates the picture! thoroughly natural, you yet feel the more than [illegible] compelling power of the gesture, and remember the divinity back of it. After you have studied the picture in this way, you will never be able to look at it without that thought.

Better than almost any other artist, Mr. Hoffman has succeeded in painting the face of the Christ, and in all his pictures—and they are many, for his life has been given to the painting of scenes in the life of the Savior—the face is that of this boy in the temple, the same face grown older, more commanding, and with the divinity shining through more and more. The Christ of his paintings is always strong and beautiful, tender, gracious, and full of sympathy. He is known for these paintings, and this is one of the best known of them all. There is no aureole, just a little light shining behind the head.

Every face in this picture is a portrait, and when it was painted the models for it were living in Dresden. They are all unmistakably Jewish, and evidently are all scholars; you feel that they can talk understandingly about the written word, and that the boy is saying something well worth their hearing or they would not be listening so attentively.

The costumes are true to the country and the time, so that these of themselves would make an interesting study. The scene is in the temple at Jerusalem, and the columns compared with the size of the men show that it was not a very large building.

This picture hangs in the gallery at Dresden, in the same building with Raphael's Sistine Madonna, and pictures by other famous artists. Dresden is noted for this picture gallery, which is considered one of the finest in Europe.

The artist, Heinrich Hoffman, is a professor at the Dresden Academy. He lives in a picturesque little [illegible] house on a quiet street, with a vine climbing over the stone front, and a small garden beside it inclosed by an iron fence.

He is just such a man as you would expect from one who had given all his life to the portrayal in his pictures of noble aims, high thoughts, and beautiful character. Would you not suppose that, in order to do this as he has done it, a man must himself be noble, pure, and of beautiful character? That is just what the artist Hoffman is. He is a handsome man, of fair complexion, with a strong, noble, intellectual face, thoughtful blue eyes and a light brown beard, worn long after the German fashion. He looks like a much younger man than his age, which is 80, for his figure is still erect and his hand still holds the brush firmly.

Not one of his pictures has crossed the ocean, but his work is best known, probably, of any living artist, certainly known by the largest number of people. He is not only noted, but his pictures appeal to the heart, and he is popular, as well, proving that one may win fame in painting purity and the religious faith of the world. The more we study Hoffman's art, the more we love the man who stands behind it. He lives a quiet, uneventful life, serene and tranquil in the exercise of a genius which has not diminished with advancing years.

On one afternoon of every week his studio is open to the public. Dresden is full of beautiful reproductions of his art. There are exquisite plaques in the porcelain for which that city is noted, and by far the larger number of these are of the head of the wonderful Boy in this, his most famous picture. If a visitor purchase one of these plaques, and they are very rich in coloring and artistic finish, he may take it to the studio on the open day and the artist will place his autograph on it, making it of double value to the possessor.

There are some very fine decorative paintings by Hoffman in the Court Theater at Dresden.

During his school life he visited Holland and Paris, returning to his native city, Darmstadt, where he painted portraits. When he was 30 years of age he went to Italy, where he spent four years, mostly in Rome; nearly all his Bible scenes were painted after this stay in Rome. He has painted thirty-two pictures in which the central figure is Christ. He has with his brush told us the story of the annunciation of the Savior's birth, the birth, the worship of the wise men, the flight into Egypt, the childhood in the little village of Nazareth, the story of the talk in the temple with the learned doctors, the temptation of the Savior, the sermon on the mount, the woman of Samaria at the well, Christ blessing little children, healing the sick, raising the dead, driving out the money changers, and raising Jairus's daughter. He has shown us Mary anointing the feet of the Savior, Mary and Martha serving Him in their home, and the Last Supper, Christ in Gethsemane, before Pilate, bearing the cross, the crucifixion, the burial, the Marys at the tomb, Easter morning, the journey to Emmons with the lonely, sad disciples, and the ascension. Among his later pictures are Christ and the fishermen, Christ and the rich young man, and Christ teaching from a boat.

What a record for a life work, to have put upon canvas and be able to leave to the world this life of Christ! The old masters never tired of painting the Holy Family or the Madonna and Child, but the art of Hoffman seems to bring the world more in touch with the [illegible] living Christ as boy and man, yet more. No one can feel after studying the picture reproduced here that the boy is a stranger. He seems one whom we have always known and loved, and yet can never know wholly, and this is true of all his representations.

To leave to the world only that which will make [illegible] better, stronger and purer, to live a life that will make one good, beloved, happy, young in old age, and famous, can any boy look forward to greater honor than [illegible]

A BEAUTIFUL COPY.

The First Methodist Church of Pasadena has an unusually fine stained glass window which is a copy of Hoffman's painting of Christ and the doctors.

The coloring is very rich and clear, and the portraits are worked out with great beauty of outline. The great charm of the design is the manner in which the artificial light from a hidden bulb is thrown directly on the central figure, intensifying the radiance of the features and garments of the boy Christ.

It is only in recent years that the workers in stained glass have been able to so make use of leading in their work as to lose little of the beauty of outline, and especially to be able to make portrait work at all true to the original. Yet, already, so much of such work has been done, and exquisitely done in the large buildings of the United States, that it has begun to lose its first novelty. But a thing of beauty never grows old, and this window will continue to reproduce in the minds of all who see it the deep significance that the artist sought in his painting.

It is not enough to have windows in our churches in which the glass is in colors; beauty of design, artistic conception, skilled workmanship, careful coloring, we cannot afford to spare any of these if we would have works of art that will endure.

Good plate glass is far better than a hodge-podge of meaningless color that uses more bad language in its profane silence than the ordinary minister can offset in his sermon.

HOW TO PAINT A CORNFIELD.

In his book, "Shandon Bells," William Black, who handles words as Millet handles colors, has the following: "Suppose ye want to paint a field of ripe corn; will ye get at it, do ye think, by sitting down and pentin' the stalks and the heads—ay, if ye were to spend a lifetime at it and paint fifty thousand of them? Ay, and if ye painted a hundred thousand of them as like as could be, ye'd be no nearer getting at your cornfield. For what ye have to paint is what ye see; and when ye look at a cornfield, ye see na single stalks at all, but a great mass of gold as it were, with a touch of orange here or paler yellow there, and a wash of green where the land is wet, and sometimes of warm red even where the stalks are mixed with weeds: and ye are no going to get that color either by chasing the daylight out of the sky and taking the thing into a room and making a clever bit of a fuzzy sketch in gray and green and black. That's easy, but it's no the cornfield. Ay, and there's more. Ye've got to paint more than ye see. Ye've got to put just that something into the cornfield that will make people's hearts warm to it when they see it on your canvas. Suppose that ye've been ill for a month or two: laid on your back maybe, and sick tired of the pattern on the wall of your room; and at last the day comes when the doctor thinks you might be lifted into a carriage and taken out for a drive. And we'll say it's a fine warm afternoon, and your heart is just full of wonder and gladness like, at the trees and the soft air. And we'll say that all of a sudden, at the turning o' the road, ye come in sicht o' this field of ripe corn, just as yellow as yellow can be under the afternoon sky. Ay, and what is it when ye see such a wonderful and beautiful thing—what is it that brings tears to your eyes? I say what is it? For it's that ye've got to catch and put in your picture, or ye'll be a mistake as a painter."

M. Henri Deglane once gave this rule for acquiring a good "touch:" "Carry a two sous sketchbook with you, draw everything you come across with a soft pencil, in the fewest possible lines."

Only the Master shall praise us,
Only the Master shall blame;
No one shall work for money,
No one shall work for fame,
But each for the joy of the working,
And each in his separate star,
Shall draw the thing as he sees it
For the God of things as they are.

KINDLINESS AMONG BIRDS.

A correspondent sends me this interesting note:

"I am sure you would like to hear of a generous woodpecker I saw this summer. I was on a farm in Somerset County, Pa., and out in the orchard I saw this red head perched on a post of the worm fence with a grub in his mouth. The world was full of young bluebirds just then, and a little flock was dancing on this same fence. Presently one of them sidled up to the woodpecker and opened his mouth, whereupon the obliging red head gave him the grub. I would hardly have believed that if I had read it, but seeing is believing."

I have known a similar case myself. I have seen a little chipping sparrow make a business of feeding some half-fledged robins. She watched for her opportunity, and whenever both parent robins were away from the nest, she rushed in with her morsel. The robins resented her officiousness, and hustled her out of the tree whenever they caught her there. I have heard of a wren that fed a brood of young robins in a similar way, and of a bluebird that fed some young birds that were in a nest near its own. I do not suppose that these acts of kindness among the birds spring from any altruistic feeling, but that they are simply the overflowing of the parental instinct.—[John Burroughs, in Outing.

Biddy Malone was in a great fever of excitement when she landed in America direct from the old country. Her certificate of character had been lost on shipboard, and what could she do? To her great happiness and consolation Tim Mulligan volunteered and wrote a beautiful recommendation as follows:

"This is to certify that Biddy Malone had a good character before she left the old country, but lost it on shipboard coming over."—[Tit-Bits.

WHEN BETSY SEWS.

When Betsy starts to sew,
I wonder where they go—
The needles and pins and all such things—
When Betsy starts to sew?

When Betsy starts to sew,
Dear me! then all is woe,—
The scissors lost and household crossed,—
When Betsy starts to sew.

When Betsy starts to sew,
Now friends, you all must know
These times are rare, so don't despair
When Betsy starts to sew.

—[Mary Stuart Bell, in Lippincott's Magazine.

THE INITIATED.

All that I loved before you came,
Delight and laughter, song and flame;
The tender beauty of the flow'r,
The seasons ripening hour by hour:
Exquisite night and rose-flush'd morn,
The shimmering gold of waving corn;
Shadow and show'r, or summer's blue,
Are dearer now because of you.

As one who scans a wondrous screen,
Painted in scarlet, gold and green,
And lauds the loveliness of line
And color blent in its design;
I look'd on all the show of things,
Before the spirit's secret springs
Were touched by that which makes us one
With Nature's heart—with stars and sun.

Ah! now sweet springtime's messengers
Shall find my lips as warm as hers!
I, too, am thrill'd with that same strife
Whereby the woodland flow'rs have life,
And you shall garner in the words
I softly speak, those songs of birds,
And winds, and waters, never dumb,
That spake of you ere you were come.

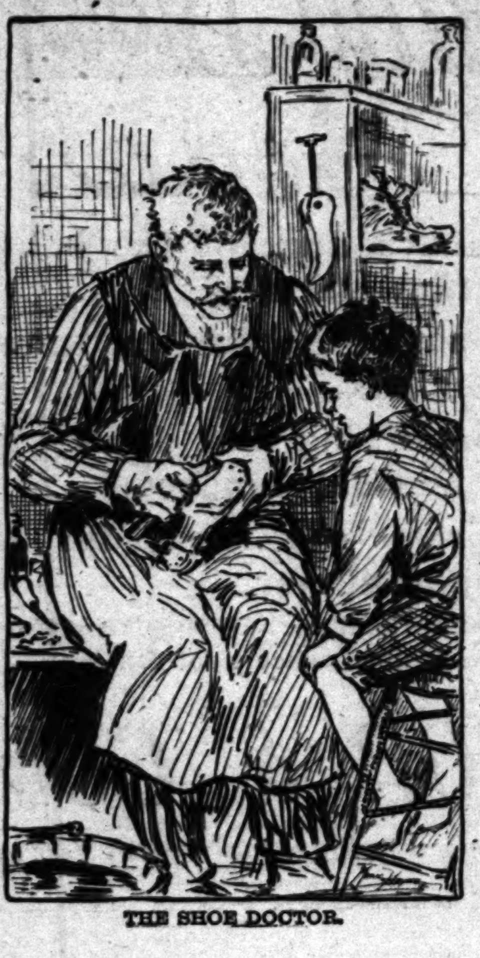
BUILDING A CANOE.

The Black Hawk was built last year and paddled and sailed all summer by a boy of fifteen, who did not spare the boat in any way, and now it lies in dry dock (down the cellar) for the winter, safe and sound in every stick. This summer it will be sandpapered, painted and put in commission again.

There are two ways of building a canoe: one is to get a plank for a keelson, a couple of strips for the gunwales, any old wooden barrel hoops for ribs, tack on the canvas, and there you are. This certainly makes a quick job, but the result is a thing horrible to look at, and which will surely be thrown away unless the owner can find a more foolish boy who will pay him 50 cents for the outfit.

The next way is to build the boat in accordance with the plan, knowing beforehand just what you are going to do, and having in your mind a clear picture of what the boat will look like when finished. This is not only the best method, but the easiest, and is sure to produce a craft of which you will never be ashamed, either for its looks or its sailing qualities. Perhaps it will seem that this last plan is slow, because it is necessary to do little work before the actual building begins; but it is really quick, since, when once started on the frame, things go with a rush.—[St. Nicholas.



THE SHOE DOCTOR.

ABSENT TREATMENT.

A young mother left her baby with her obliging mother-in-law, one night, in order to attend the wedding of a relative who lived in a town about a hundred miles distant. The young woman, apparently free from all family cares, spent an enjoyable evening; but just as the newly-wedded couple were preparing to depart on the midnight train, an expression of acute anxiety flashed across the young mother's countenance.

"Oh, George!" she exclaimed, clutching her husband's arm: "There was one thing that I forgot to tell your mother to do for the baby, and he'll never go to sleep without it. You must go right out and send her a telegram."

"Nonsense," said George, "this isn't the first baby she's taken care of."

"But George, she'll never think of doing just the right thing, and the baby is so perfectly trained that he won't accept any substitute. I know he's crying hard at this very minute."

She was right. A hundred miles away a weary grandmother was at her wits' end because she could think of nothing that would pacify a wailing infant who was most wretchedly sleepy yet utterly unable to go to sleep. She was pacing wearily back and forth in the nursery to the accompaniment of her grandson's howls when the door bell rang and her daughter-in-law's telegram arrived. Tearing it open, the tired, perplexed grandmother read:

"Lay baby on his stomach in the crib."

Two minutes later, the baby, adjusted to his liking, was sound asleep."—[Carroll Rankin, in Leslie's Monthly.

THE INTELLIGENT WREN.

One cold day late in December, on going to my "Slabsides," I found a winter wren in the "spare chamber." As I entered the bird did not lose its head at all, as birds usually do under such circumstances. It did not, in a sudden panic, make a dash at the window, but circled about, came out the door, flew down the stairway, passed two windows without heeding them, and went out the open door. What struck me was the coolness and circumspection of the little bird. It appeared to know all about windows, and that they were not what they seemed, and it appeared to know the ins and outs of that house like an old occupant. I concluded that the wren might have been harboring there several days, and had become pretty well acquainted with glass and with the stairway opening between the two floors, so that when I came in it wasted no time upon windows, but made straight for all open doors. I hope it had a good feast of dormant flies and spiders while it was under my roof. I have seen the winter wren here during every winter month. It is a hardy bird. It, no doubt, gets its living on dormant insects, which it finds in holes and in all manner of hiding places. It breeds in the Catskills, and I sometimes hear it in April in full song on its way to the mountains.—[John Burroughs, in Outing.

THE CRAFTY OPOSSUM.

To the uninitiated the opossum is a slow-going, stupid beast, with hardly enough ambition to eat his food. But those who have studied his habits declare that there is more of the rogue than the fool in his make-up, and that his apparent stupidity is but a part of his business policy. He seldom goes hungry, and he always has a hole to crawl into when he is sleepy. And, in spite of the slowness, he manages, some way, to catch many animals much swifter than he is. It is said that even the brisk squirrel falls a prey to him in the open woods, where one would think the spry little creature had all the advantage. The opossum catches rats and mice, and eats ground birds and their eggs. He is not entirely restricted to a meat diet, however, but is fond of nearly all the berries and other wild fruits that grow in the woods and fields, and has been known to creep into orchards and berry patches to devour cultivated fruits.—[Detroit News-Tribune.

PUMICE FROM RUSSIA.

The mineral wealth of Russia is hardly appreciated, and new industries are from time to time being developed, though the effect of the present war may be felt in many new schemes. A recent proposition is the development of the pumice stone, which has been found in the provinces of Erivan and Kars, in Transcaucasia. The deposits in Kars, at Malayakutma, are near the surface in horizontal strata, and occasionally run over two and a half feet thick, furnishing a high-grade mineral that is used for polishing, and a poorer quality from which hydraulic cement can be made. The material is convenient to Kars, from which place it will be shipped by rail to Poti, on the Black Sea, and thence conveyed by steamer to Odessa. When the works are operating to their full capacity several million pounds a year of the material will be produced. The world's supply of pumice is now largely derived from the Lipari Islands near Sicily.—[Harper's Weekly.

A BLOOMING BIRD.

They were walking on the terrace,
Mama and little Fred;
There they met a stately peacock,
His gorgeous tail outspread.

As they stepped out of the pathway,
To give His Highness room,
"Oh, look!" cried Fred, astonished,
"The peacock is in bloom!"

THE GREAT WAR.

FENG WANG CHENG CAPTURED BY JAPS.

Losses on Both Sides Reported to Have Been Very Heavy.

Gen. Kouropatkin's Ominous Silence Causes Uneasiness at St. Petersburg—Vladivostok Squadron Said to Have Been Destroyed—Russians Reported Blowing up Ships at Port Arthur—More Japs Landing.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Feng Wang Cheng was captured by Japanese troops on Friday. The losses on both sides are reported to have been heavy.

The ominous silence of Gen. Kouropatkin since the battle of the Yalu is causing great uneasiness and is filling the air with wild rumors, one of which is that Gen. Kouropatkin's army, in a rapid movement on Feng Wang Cheng, met the Japanese in a disastrous battle, Kouropatkin being wounded. This report is officially denied, but the public is uneasy and expecting the worst.

Reports from the palace declare that the Czar is greatly depressed over the recent reverses at the front. The Emperor has telegraphed to Kouropatkin and Viceroy Alexieff demanding in their reports the absolute truth of conditions at the front, under pain of severe punishment if they continue to deceive him.

STRUCK WHILE IRON WAS HOT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

TOKIO, May 8, 12 m.—The Japanese captured Feng Wang Cheng day before yesterday (Friday.)

It was the second line of the Russian's defense and a stiff fight was anticipated. Gen. Kuroki pressed forward and attacked before the Russians had recovered from the demoralization and confusion into which they had been thrown by their previous defeat on the Yalu River.

KOUROPATKIN BADLY HEMMED IN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch]. A dispatch from St. Petersburg says it is believed at military headquarters there that the Japanese force which landed at Pitsewo numbered at least [illegible] men. Three columns envelop Kouropatkin. The road to [illegible] Gen. [illegible] left with [illegible] men. Fronting him is a Japanese army of the same strength, occupying the road to Port Arthur. His right flank is threatened by the landing of a large force at or near Inkow, the debarkation of which has not yet been officially announced.

HEAVY LOSSES AT KULIENCHENG.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Russian losses at Kulien-cheng last Sunday are stated at seven officers and 855 men killed, 600 men missing and 1850 wounded. Gen. Kashtainlsky, it is stated, was wounded in the head by the bursting of a shell.

JAPS SMILE WITH JOY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOKIO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Heartfelt joy is written on the faces of the Japanese officials, who usually mask all emotion behind an affable smile, because at last the Emperor's flag is flying and Japanese troops are massing on Russian soil.

The occupation of Dalny and Talienwan Bay will take place in two or three days, according to advices received by the war authorities from the front. Pitsewo offers almost harbor advantages, whereas Talienwan Bay will admit whatever heavy guns and stores the troops of the second army may desire to land.

The security of the Japanese position on the neck of the peninsula is beyond reasonable doubt. It is not thought that Port Arthur can spare a force to attack the invaders, nor that Kouropatkin will venture to march down the peninsula from Liao Yang to Newchwang.

Such a movement on the part of the Russian commander-in-chief would expose his flank and rear to an attack by numerous Japanese divisions now on the sea, to say nothing of the dangers that threaten him from Kuroki's advancing columns on the southeast.

No course is considered open to Russia except to retire gradually until the campaign can be conducted beyond the menace that constantly hovers over Kouropatkin's troops from the sea.

The Japanese strategy in connection with Port Arthur, which is now isolated, is problematical.

GERMAN INTERVENTION. NEARER THAN BEFORE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Kaiser's recent threats against France have caused much discussion, but comparatively little newspaper comment. The danger of war with France is ever present and the subject has been threshed over so often that little is left to be said. However, the friendly attitude displayed by the government toward Russia in the matter of aid covertly extended to her in the war with Japan, awakens the greatest interest. Germany has undoubtedly cultivated Russian friendship for many years. After the retirement of Prince Bismarck, a marked change took place in the relations of the two powers, and in 1895 Germany sided with Russia in preventing Japan from reaping any results from her war with China. Since then Germany has apparently acted in harmony with the Czar on all important questions affecting the Far East, and China in particular.

The "yellow peril" is made to do duty as a stalking horse, but the real fact is that self-interest actuates Germany, as it does other powers. The Emperor, if the truth be told, probably does not care a rap for the "yellow peril," and fears only the eventual loss of certain Chinese territory on which his eyes have been earnestly fixed for a year or more.

The "yellow peril" has not been worked up as much as it will be in the event of further Japanese victories. It is hardly possible that the German Emperor could remain quiescent should Japan succeed in freeing Manchuria entirely of Russians, as now seems possible, and gaining complete control of that province. Certainly German intervention seems nearer than it did even a week ago.

RUSSIA SURPRISES EXPOSITION OFFICIALS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. LOUIS, May 7.—A cablegram was received from St. Petersburg today by Director of Exhibits Skiff of the World's Fair, stating that Russia will make an elaborate exhibit.

Russia, before the war with Japan, had planned to be represented at the fair, but afterward decided to abandon its proposed exhibit.

The Russians will take twenty thousand square feet in the Varied Industries building and also will be represented in the Liberal and Fine Arts building.

The State Department at Washington and the foreign representatives of the exposition had made efforts to bring about a representation by Russia.

Russians Believed to Have Fallen Back to Mao Tien Pass—Large Strip of Manchuria Now Under Control of Little Brown Men—The Czar Deeply Pained.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 8, 2:18 a.m.—When the War Committee adjourned this morning it failed to give out any official dispatches regarding the situation on the Liao Tung Peninsula or at Feng Wang Cheng. Nevertheless, there is no doubt that the Japanese troops were in touch with the Russian forces at Feng Wang Cheng, and the report that the latter had evacuated that place is generally credited. Surprise is caused by the withdrawal of Gen. Kouropatkin toward his base at Liao Yang, and it is said that immediately after he learned of Gen. Zassalitch's losses, he sent reinforcements to him to enable him to retain his position.

The officials here frankly confess, however, that they are not fully informed of Kouropatkin's plan. He is in sole charge of the operations in Manchuria. The Emperor decided when Gen. Kouropatkin started out that he should have complete independence, so that there could be no grounds for compaint that he was hampered by instructions or advice from officers in St. Petersburg who could not possibly know all the conditions which the troops in the field would meet with Kouropatkin, therefore, has made his own dispositions and formulated his own plan. What little is known here shows that he intends to observe the same caution that has distinguished the operations of the Japanese. Finding that he could not offer battle at Feng Wang Cheng, with an even chance of success, he has decided to fall back, it is believed, to the Mao Tien Pass. Back of the pass there is another which has a [illegible] near Liao Yang.

JAPS' OLD TACTICS.

The Japanese have followed, up to now, practically in all respects their plans in the Chino-Japanese War. They have crossed the Yalu at the the same place and landed upon the Liao Tung Peninsula at the same points, and it is believed they will continue their tactics, as their dispositions foreshadow the movements made in 1894.

It is not at all unlikely that another Japanese army will be landed upon the peninsula, which will move forward, along the railway line. During the Chino-Japanese War, the Japanese captured Port Arthur two weeks after their disembarkation upon the peninsula. The Russians say that the Japanese will not find it so easy a task to reduce Port Arthur as they did before.

BLOWING UP WARSHIPS.

Desperate Move Resorted to by the Russians at Port Arthur.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHEFOO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Terrific explosions following each other in rapid succession are taking place in Port Arthur Harbor and they are being heard so plainly here that the populace is panic-stricken. An explanation is found in a definite plan contemplating the blowing up of the seven magnificent battleships and armored cruisers now bottled up in the harbor and the complete destruction of the town, which plan was formulated by Gen. Stoessel, the Russian commander, acting under specific instructions from the Czar, in a secret dispatch sent before the wires were cut leading into the stronghold now doomed by the Japanese. The chief of garrison was also entrusted by the Czar to destroy the fortifications and dynamite and spike the guns on Golden Hill. Thus Russia will give to the victorious soldiers of the Mikado only the empty shell of what three months ago was believed to be next to Gibraltar, the most impregnable fortress on the globe. The loss to the Russian Treasury involved by this desperate move will exceed $30,000,000, but the immensity of the sacrifice is swallowed up in knowing that the Japanese will gain only a slight advantage by the capture of Port Arthur.

COPPERING HEARST.

Democratic Leaders Very Busy.

Parker and Gorman Uniting to Defeat Ambition of Yellow Kid.

Olney in the Fight Only in the Interest of Judge Alton B. Parker.

East Eager to See Whether California Will be in Line for Hearst.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Democratic leaders will devote their time for the next few weeks to defeating Hearst's attempts to secure control of the State delegations to the National Democratic Convention from Indiana and Ohio. The greatest fight against Hearst will be in Indiana, where the campaign has already been opened by Tom Taggart, who has, up to date, won every skirmish against Hearst and his crowd. If Hearst gets an instructed delegation from Indiana it will be because he buys it, and the Democracy of that State is not regarded now as being so low as to sell itself in a body.

In the last few days missionaries for Judge Parker and Senator Gorman have gone into Indiana, and it is believed that an agreement has been reached to concentrate all their energies toward getting Parker instructions, Gorman withdrawing practically from that field in order to make it certain that Hearst will not get control of the convention.

In Ohio, where the Democratic party is given to faddism, where Tom Johnsonism was rampant one year ago, there is an attempt to [illegible] by the old familiar plan of having him stand for the workingman and the plain people, as against anybody who has $10 in his own right. That game has been played so often in Ohio, and Hearst's butter-fingered managers are playing it so clumsily in this case, that there is not much show of his winning a complete victory there, although in some localities, where Johnsonism and other fads still linger, he may get a few scattering votes.

What the Democrats are working for now is Parker delegations from Indiana and Ohio. They feel certain they will get the solid South for Parker, and with delegations they now have instructed, that would give them practical control of the convention.

The entire East is watching with interest to see what California will do about instructions for Hearst. His representatives in Washington are declaring that he will get a solid delegation from that State, and that he will get instructions through the State convention without a struggle. Hearst is pictured as California's idol, and that being his programme, the loss of that State will be the biggest body blow he has got in his disastrous campaign.

"Alabama," said Representative Underwood of Birmingham this morning, "will go to St. Louis to pick a winner rather than voice the instructions of any convention at home. That is why, in my opinion, our State will not instruct. We want the party to win and desire our delegates to have the amplest opportunity to ascertain who the successful leader will be. My own opinion is that when our delegates find how much party dissension in New York Parker's candidacy would invite, they will try to find somebody else. Sentiment today, however, it may be acknowledged, is friendly to Parker, but in the belief that he is the man to carry New York. Personally I wish the Democrats would drop the two-thirds rule at the St. Louis convention. It is more liable to result in a weak nomination than to insure a strong one, because it is apt to compel the majority to accept a compromise at the behest of the minority."

OLNEY NOT A CANDIDATE. IN FIGHT TO HELP PARKER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Richard Olney is not a candidate for the nomination for the Presidency, and as such will not be balloted for in the convention after the first call for votes, if, indeed, his name is placed before the convention.

This statement, radical though it may seem, in view of the declaration of the Massachusetts convention for the former Secretary of State, and the noise made by his friends, is made on the authority of one of the best-known Democrats in the Bay State, who did as much as any other to hold the State in line against Hearst in the late primaries and conventions.

According to this man, and there is plenty of evidence to back the statement up, Olney was brought out as a candidate that the people in control of the Massachusetts machine might go to the convention with a solid bunch of delegates, whom they might, when the time seemed ripe, throw to Judge Parker or such other candidate as the recognized reorganizers might decide upon.

Furthermore, it was planned by these same people to try and line up other New England delegations for the Boston man, in order that the northeast group of delegates might be turned over to the New York candidate at the right time.

To a great extent the States in the northern tier of the northeast take their cues from Boston, and, to a limited extent, the plan so far has succeeded that the delegates chosen from New Hampshire, while unpledged, are for the Boston man as they now stand, while the chances are that the delegates from Vermont and Maine will be in the same boat.

It is difficult to convince the Democrats of Boston that Grover Cleveland is not a candidate for the nomination, despite his assertion that he is not. They view his explanation of his labor record and his apology for the bond deal with Morgan et al., as being due to a desire on his part to clear the way for his début in the role of Moses at St. Louis.

PACIFIC COAST HEADQUARTERS.

REPUBLICAN PARTY TO ADOPT A NEW PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

Branch Headquarters to be Established in San Francisco and New York With a Vice-chairman in Charge at Each Place—Good Man Wanted for the Job.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the coming Presidential campaign, the Republican party may adopt an entirely new plan and open national headquarters in San Francisco. This plan has been thought about and talked about by Republican leaders here this week. In all previous campaigns the Republican party has had one headquarters from which all business was done, with the exception of the last Presidential campaign when in a half-hearted way, something approaching headquarters were opened in New York as a branch of the main headquarters in Chicago. That plan worked so well, even when given only half a trial, that in the coming campaign it is entirely possible that the party will have three headquarters—the main headquarters in Chicago, headquarters at New York, where the business for the eastern part of the country will be transacted, and headquarters at San Francisco for the Pacific Coast and Mountain States.

If that plan will be followed there will be one chairman of the National Republican Committee and three vice-chairmen. One vice-chairman will come from the Middle West and have charge of the work in the Middle West. He undoubtedly will be Postmaster-General Payne, who has heretofore done good work in that field. Then there will be another vice-chairman from the East, probably some New York man, whose name has not been decided upon yet, and still another vice-chairman from the Pacific Coast.

While this plan is only tentative, it has gone so far that names have been under discussion for the Pacific Coast vice-chairman. No name that seems exactly suitable has been hit upon yet, for that place, and the name of every prominent Republican from California has been discussed. It seems to be the general agreement that if the plan is entered into, the vice-chairman from the Coast ought properly to come from California. Among the names mentioned for the job of running the campaign on the Coast and in the Mountain States are Judge Van Fleet, National Republican committeeman from California; M. H. De Young, John D. Spreckels, former national committeeman; Representative Victor Metcalf of Oakland, Senator Geo. Perkins and Gov. Pardee. These names, with some others, have been gone over in general discussion about the advisability of adopting the plan of putting headquarters in San Francisco.

In the choice of vice-chairmen for New York and San Francisco, it has been said with emphasis that social, financial and other pulls will be utterly ignored. Any Republican who can come forward and show by his record that he is big enough, broad enough and knows enough about politics to handle this thing, can have this job. It will not be given out for any real or fancied political debt, nor will it be used to show favor toward any faction. The Republican party is looking for a real political fighting man who can deliver the goods next November, and the leaders say they will take nobody else.

BRYAN FEELS SAD.

COVERTLY ATTACKS PARKER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] W. J. Bryan has written to ex-Supreme Judge McCabe, a Hearst supporter, making a covert attack on Judge Parker. It is given out by the Hearst management. While the letter asserts that the writer has no choice for the Presidential nomination, the situation in Indiana means Hearst. Mr. Bryan is pained to learn that some of the Indiana Democrats of the Bryan school have been "caught in the trap," and speaks of Judge Parker's "attack of lockjaw."

MR. CLEVELAND'S COSTLY LEGACY.

GOVERNMENT HEAVY LOSER BY HIS BOND ISSUES.

Morgan-Belmont Syndicate Made Eight Million Dollars Out of First Deal—Belmont et al Now Trying to Raise Five Millions to Elect Judge Parker.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Two successive Republican administrations have succeeded in paying all but $1,151,200 of the first $100,000,000 loan of the Cleveland administration, and Treasury officials predict that the entire amount will be closed up within the next few months.

This particular legacy of Mr. Cleveland cost the government just $32,789,077, a sum which would have come within a few millions of the amount necessary to pay for the Panama Canal property, and is a monument to the wisdom and economy of Democratic financing.

In calculating the loss to the government, it affords little consolation to those who have the best interests of the country at heart to recall the fact that President Cleveland entered into a private arrangement with the Morgan-Belmont syndicate, whereby, as proved by the subsequent experience of the same administration, the syndicate obtained at about 104½ bonds which would readily have brought 119 in the open market, thus affording the purchasers a profit of upward of $8,000,000, with a corresponding loss to the government. In other words, had Mr. Cleveland sold this issue in the open market, the cost to the government of the 1895 bond issue would have been approximately $24,789,077, instead of $32,789,077.

It is further regarded as something of a coincidence that almost simultaneously with the balancing of the Federal ledger on the Cleveland bond issue of 1895 the New York Tribune has announced that August Belmont, together with ex-Senator Hill, Senator McCarren, William F. Sheehan and Cord Meyer, is planning to raise in New York City a campaign fund of $5,000,000 to be used in electing as President Alton B. Parker, the man who bears so conspicuously the hall-mark of Grover Cleveland.

The bonds issued by Mr. Cleveland in 1895 were to be retired by purchase or redemption by February 2, 1904. If the agreement had remained outstanding until February of this year, the interest would have amounted to $50,000,000. The government has, however, by purchase or otherwise, reduced sufficient bonds to save $440,127 in interest, which leaves the amount paid as interest from the time the bonds were issued until they were redeemed, $49,550,873; adding to this the interest on $100,000,000, the face value of the bonds, the total cost to the government for the redemption of this bond issue amounts to $149,550,870.

At the time they were sold, however, in 1895, the bonds commanded a premium and brought $117,171,796. As it cost the government $149,550,870 to redeem bonds for which $117,171,796 was originally paid into the Treasury, experts figure out a net cost of $32,789,077 on the first bond issue of the second Cleveland administration. Interesting developments are expected when the cost to the government of the remaining $160,000,000 of the bond issue of the Cleveland administration shall be computed.

LEADING CANDIDATES' CLAIMS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The three leading candidates for the Republican gubernatorial nomination make the following claims in instructed delegates: Deneen, 345; Lowden, 243; Yates, 220.

The County Republican Convention adjourned over until Monday to harmonize over a successor to State's Attorney Deneen. James Reddick is hailed as successor to Congressman Lorimer as boss of the Chicago machine.

West Virginia Election Troubles.

CHARLESTON (W. Va.) May 7.—At the Republican primaries today Grant P. Hall, running for secretary of state, created a sensation by the securing of the election books in the fourth ward. The trouble finally resulted in the polls not being opened. Hall was arrested and removed from the polls. At Patrick, where Gene Chandler was shot last night, the polls were not even opened today.

UNION DRIVERS DISCHARGED.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—Every hack, coupé and carriage in San Francisco owned or controlled by the Stable and Carriage Owners' Association was without a union driver tonight. This state of affairs was brought about by the action of the carriage owners in resentment of what they consider dictation in their business. They are backed by the Citizens' Alliance.

JAPS FIRED ON TRAIN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, May 8.—The Journal's Mukden correspondent says the last train from Port Arthur to reach that place arrived at 2 o'clock Saturday. Passengers state that at a point twenty-five miles from Pitsewo they saw a number of Russians retreating. A Cossack officer ordered the driver to reverse his engine, but Col. Ouraroff commanded the engineer to go ahead at full speed. The Japanese in pursuit of the Russians fired several volleys, and a number of bullets struck the carriages. Three of the passengers were wounded.

HARBOR STILL OPEN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 8.—The Russian admiralty expects to be able to continue communication with Port Arthur in spite of cutting of the telegraph line. Masts for use in wireless telegraphy have been erected at the fortress to communicate with stations at the north end of the peninsula. Trained carrier pigeons were also sent to Port Arthur some time ago, and through one means or another the Russian authorities hope to retain communication. The admiral is in possession of specific information to the effect that the harbor of Port Arthur is open.

Official Report on Bottling of Port Arthur—The Crews of Most of the Sunken Ships Perished at Their Posts.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

TOKIO, May 7, 4 p.m.—Vice-Admiral Togo's offical recital of the latest engagement off Port Arthur, which was received here today, shows that the Japanese have blocked the entrance to the harbor.

On Tuesday morning, after the blockading flotilla had been scattered by a gale and the commander of the flotilla had signaled in vain that the attempt be abandoned, pending the moderation of the storm, the crews of the separated ships, in no way daunted by the weather which separated them from their companions, proceeded to the work on their own desperate initiative. They forced their way in the face of Russian fire, which was more deadly than ever before, as a result of improved Russian defenses, over the field of mines. Many of these exploded, yet five out of the eight Japanese blockading ships were jammed into the inner channel and now prevent egress from the harbor to all craft excepting small boats.

This attack exceeded all its predecessors in desperation, and the courage displayed by the volunteer crews is equal to that shown in any event in the war history of the world. Although Vice-Admiral Togo again avoided damage to a single one of his vessels, the attack proved to be expensive in lives.

The blockading flotilla consisted of eight stone-laden merchantmen. They were escorted by the gunboats Akagi, Commander Fugimonto, and Choikai, Commander Iwamura, the second torpedo-boat destroyer flotilla, under the command of Commander Shida; the third torpedo-boat destroyer flotilla, Commander Tsuchiya; the fourth flotilla, Commander Nagai; the fifth flotilla, Commander Mano; the ninth torpedo-boat flotilla, Commander Yashima; the tenth torpedo-boat flotilla, Commander Otaki, and the fourteenth torpedo-boat flotilla, Commander Sakuri.

The blockading vessels and their escort left the main squadron for Port Arthur on Monday evening. They encountered a southeasterly gale and by 11 o'clock at night the seas were mountainous, and it was found impossible to keep the steamers together. Commander Hayashi, who was in command of the expedition, observed the impossibility of keeping the flotilla intact, and signaled to abandon the attack.

These signals were repeated until 2 o'clock in the morning, but they failed to reach the vessels of the expedition which were swept apart by the tempestuous seas, and proceeded separately for the mouth of the harbor. Upon arriving there the Mikawa Maru, one of the merchantment, saw that the enemy was firing upon the fourteenth torpedo-boat flotilla. The men on board the Mikawa Maru thought the other steamers had reached the harbor mouth and they steamed boldly in. She was followed closely by another of the merchantmen, believed to be the Sakura Maru.

The Russians had fires burning at the mouth of the harbor, and they used also many powerful searchlights on the invading Japanese vessels. They poured an incessant fire into the channel.

Lieut. Sosa, who was in command of of the Mikawa Maru, unhesitatingly forced his ship into the channel, rammed his way through the booms, and reached the center of the inner entrance. Here he anchored his vessel and then blew her up. She sank immediately.

Another steamer supposed to be the Sakura Maru, then came to anchor near a projecting rock at the mouth of the harbor and sank. Following the Sakura Maru came the Totomi Maru, the Yedo Maru, the Otaru Maru, the Sagami Maru, the Aikoku Maru and the Asagawo Maru. These six steamers advanced to the mouth of the harbor. The Russian fire now became highly effective, while a number of mines, which were struck by the steamers began to explode. These explosions caused heavy casualties among the Japanese on board the blockading vessels. The Totomi Maru collided with a boom. This turned her stem to the eastward and she sank athwart the passage, blocking nearly one-half of the entrance to the harbor.

When the Yedo Maru reached the mouth of the passage and was lowering her anchor her captain, Commander Takayangi, was shot through the stomach and killed. Sub-Lieut. Nagata succeeded to the command. He anchored the Yedo Maru and sank her. Two other stone-laden steamers, believed to be the Otaru Maru and the Sagami Maru, then entered the mouth of the harbor and sank.

The Aikou then struck a mine five cable lengths from the mouth of the passage, which exploded and caused her to sink. The lieutenant of this vessel, Uchida, Chief Engineer Aoki and eight men are missing.

A steamer, thought to be the Asagawo Maru, which appeared to have had her rudder broken, blew herself up at the foot of Golden Hill and sank there.

Vice-Admiral Togo, in his report, says:

"This undertaking, when compared to the last two, resulted in greater casualties to our side. Owing to the inclemency of the weather and the increased preparations for defense completed by the enemy, we could save none of the officers or the crews of the Otaru Maru, the Sagami Maru, the Sakura Maru or the Asagawo Maru. It is to be regretted that nothing particular could be learned concerning the brave discharge of their duties, but the memory of their exemplary conduct will remain long in the imperial navy.

"The destroyer and the torpedo-boat flotillas, besides resisting the enemy bravely, fought against wind and waves. The torpedo-boat flotilla approached close to the mouth of the harbor and rescued more than half the men. Torpedo boat No. 67 had a steam pipe broken by a shell and was disabled, but a consort torpedo boat, No. 70, went to her assistance and towed her away. Three of the crew of No. 67 were wounded.

"The destroyer Actaka had her port engine damaged by a shell, and one sailor on board of her was killed. One sailor on board the Hayabusa was killed by a shell.

"The third detachment, Rear-Admiral Dewa commanding, reached Port Arthur at 8 o'clock Tuesday morning. The first detachment, under Vice-Admiral Togo and Rear-Admiral Nashiba second in command, arrived off Port Arthur at 9 o'clock in the morning for the purpose of protecting the destroyer and the torpedo-boat flotillas and to search for the crews of the sunken merchantmen. The vessels of these detachments remained until 4 o'clock of Tuesday afternoon, but their search was fruitless. The day was foggy and it was impossible to observe the condition of the enemy. The detachments then returned to their base and since the morning of May 4 they have been engaged in other operations."

CHANGE INEXPEDIENT.

Episcopal Committee of Fifteen Favors Retaining Old Name for Church for the Present.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BOSTON, May 7.—The committee of fifteen appointed by the national triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church at San Francisco in 1901, to consider the advisability of changing the legal name of the denomination, has prepared an extended report, in which the opinion is expressed that any change at this time is inexpedient.

The report is to be submitted to the General Conference, which will assemble in this city next October. The committee recommends the passage by the Boston convention of a resolution discharging the committee from further consideration of the subject.

The report is signed by all fifteen members of the committee, although three appendices, one signed by seven members, a second by five and a third by one, are attached.

In New England, the Diocese of New Hampshire was the only one to vote for an immediate change, although the clergy of Vermont expressed a similar opinion, and the laity favored a correction at some future time.

The large eastern dioceses were opposed to any correction at present, but the "high church" strongholds of the West held opposite views.

May a Dull Month for Weddings but June Promises to Sustain Its Reputation.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Aside from weddings there is but little to interest the social world, as nearly all the fashionables are preparing to go out of town. Many of the country homes are now being opened.

Only a few fashionable weddings are scheduled for May and the month promises to be rather dull. The wedding of Miss Algenia Trude to Jacob Kern, May 26, will be the most prominent. The bridal couple will go abroad soon after.

June, however, promises to sustain its reputation as the month of brides. A score of interesting events are on the cards. Some of the most notable will be the nuptials of Miss Florence Higginbothem and Richard T. Crane, Jr., Miss Marie Inderrieden and J. Ward Amberg, Miss Avis Burley and Roger Sherman Boutell, secretary of the American legation at Berne; Miss Daisy Wilson and Daniel P. Trude.

An interesting announcement today was the engagement of Mrs. Mae Ethel Sattley to Dr. Elliott R. Carpenter. Another engagement of the week was that of Miss Jessie Margaret High to William S. Ennis.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Marie Demetra Vaka, daughter of a former Governor of Crete, to Kenneth Brown, formerly of Chicago, son of Mrs. Caroline Brown, founder of the Chicago Woman's Club.

President Canadame of Peru.

LIMA (Peru) May 7.—President Canadame, who has been ill for some time at Arequipa, died today. The President's death is deeply regretted, as all political elements regarded him as an honorable man, devoted to the true interests of the country. Manuel Candamo was the man accepted for the provisional Presidency of Peru in 1895 by the revolutionists under the leadership of Nicholas de Pierola and President Caceres, whereby they agreed to stop fighting. Señor Candamo chose his Cabinet from all factions, and he was able to unite the country. Four years later he was elected President by a great majority.

Eastern Girl's Disappearance Puzzle to Police.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LODI, May 7.—Frank Hamilton of Oakland, while trying to make a balloon ascension at Woodbridge this afternoon narrowly escaped instant death. He may yet die from injuries sustained.

He tried to make the jump while the wind was blowing a gale. When the balloon was turned loose it shot away and steered against a tall pine tree, a rope on the parachute caught in a limb, tearing the parachute loose from the balloon. Hamilton fell a distance of a hundred feet, landing on his head and shoulders. The fall rendered him unconscious. An examination showed no bones broken, but his face and side were horribly lacerated. The doctors fear that internal injuries have resulted.

ARRIVES AND DISAPPEARS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

OAKLAND, May 7.—For three days the police hace been vainly searching for Mabel Armstrong, 16 years of age, who arrived here last Wednesday on the overland train and has disappeared. The girl's parents died in Milwaukee recently, and her grandfather, T. G. Armstrong, of East Oakland, sent for her. He received a dispatch saying she would arrive May 4. On that day a girl answering her description was seen to alight from the train at Oakland. She was so evidently bewildered that a policeman volunteered his services and told her how she would reach East Oakland by the electric line. That was the last trace of her.

CLASSIFIED AT LAST.

Mary Baker Eddy, leader of the Christian Scientists, and John Alexander Dowie are insane, according to Dr. D. R. Brower, the noted alienist. Dr. Brower's assertion was made while testifying in a case where illegal confinement in an asylum was charged.

"In the case of Dr. Dowie," he said, "he has lost his identity. He is no longer Dowie, but Elijah II. In Mrs. Eddy's case her insanity is shown from her expansive ideas of her importance in the world and as a teacher of religion."

FASHIONABLE PANIC.

A mysterious encounter in the fashionable Montone Hotel on Dearborn avenue betwen Proprietor W. R. Hearn and Albert C. Todd, an artist, resulted in Miss Maud Schonnerhorn jumping from the second floor of the hotel to the street. She was painfully injured. Todd was arrested and locked up. The sensational affair set the hotel in a panic. Many fashionable people live at the Montone, and all denied themselves to reporters.

IN AN OLD TRUNK.

Baby Finds a Bottle of Carbolic Acid and Drinks It.

While the mother was unpacking an old trunk a little 18 months old baby got hold of a bottle of carbolic acid while playing on the floor and his stomach was so badly burned it was feared he would not live, for he could not eat ordinary foods. The mother says in telling of the case:

"It was all two doctors could do to save him, as it burnt his throat and stomach so bad that for two months after he took the poison nothing would lay on his stomach. Finally I took him into the country and tried new milk and that was no better for him. His Grandma finally suggested Grape-Nuts and I am thankful I adopted the food, for he commenced to get better right away and would not eat anything else. He commenced to get fleshy and his cheeks like red roses and now he is entirely well.

"I took him to Matamoras on a visit and every place we went to stay to eat he called for Grape-Nuts and I would have to explain how he came to call for it, as it was his main food.

"The names of the physicians who attended the baby are Dr. Eddy of this town and Dr. Geo Gale of Newport O., and anyone can write to me or to them and learn what Grape-Nuts food will do for children and grown-ups too." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

WASHINGTON.

THRO' CANADA TO ALASKA.

Permission to Send Troops by This Route is Asked.

Steamship Companies Fighting Transport Service.

Conference Over Canal Work Held at White House.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The War Department has just completed plans for sending the Third Regular Infantry to Alaska to relieve the troops now stationed at Alaskan posts. Two companies of the Third are to be sent to Fort Egbert over the railroad or Canadian route, provided there is no opposition from the Canadian government. The question of securing the permission of Canada will be referred to the State Department in a few days and steps will then be taken to bring the matter to the attention of the British Ambassador.

Ever since the determination of the War Department officials to use the Canadian route for sending troops to Fort Egbert, transportation companies using the Yukon route have urged that Canada would interpose objection to American troops passing over Canadian territory. Last year several small detachments of American soldiers went through by this route without any objection, but this year it is proposed to forward a force consisting of 142 men to relieve the smaller garrison now at Fort Egbert. In fact, sending two companies doubles the garrison now there.

In connection with this programme there is another transportation fight, due to the decision of the War Department to send the Third Infantry north from San Francisco on board the transport Crook, instead by a commercial steamer and the commercial companies have protested against such action on the ground it should have the business. It is not likely the protest will be followed by any alteration of the plan, which is for the Crook to sail from San Francisco with the regiment July 1, and proceed to Skagway, where it will leave the band and companies A, B and C to garrison Haines Mission.

Cos. G and H, destined for Fort Egbert, will also be left at Skagway, and will proceed to Fort Egbert from there. Cos. E and F are to be sent to Fort Liscum, relieving the company now there. Co. D goes to Fort Davis, relieving one company, L, and M will go to St. Michaels, relieving one company, I; and K will go to Fort Gibbon, relieving one company.

SHAW SIGNS CANAL WARRANT. LARGEST ONE EVER ISSUED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Secretary Shaw this afternoon signed a Treasury warrant for $40,000,000, which will be delivered next Monday to J. P. Morgan & Co. of New York as disbursing agents of this government on account of the Panama Canal purchase. The warrant is dated May 9, and will be delivered by Secretary Shaw personally on Monday next.

This warrant is many times larger than any warrant ever before issued by this government. The largest sum previously covered by a single government warrant was for $7,200,000, paid to Russia in 1868, on account of the Alaskan purchase. In 1899, this government paid Spain, through the French Ambassador, $20,000,000 for the Philippine Islands, but this sum was represented by four warrants of $5,000,000. The $15,000,000 agreed upon as the purchase price for the Louisiana territory was paid in 1803 by the assumption by the United States of claims of citizens of this country against France, amounting to $3,750,000, and the issue to France of certificates of stock to the sum of $11,250,000.

CONFER AS TO CANAL WORK. WALKER AT WHITE HOUSE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The President had an extended conference today with Admiral Walker, president of the Isthmian Canal Commission, concerning matters connected with the canal work. They discussed practically the regulations which are to be issued by the President governing the canal zone and the operations of the commission.

Admiral Walker said, in leaving the White House, that at present the labor supply on the isthmus was ample for the purpose of the commission. Just now, between 700 and 800 men, principally Jamaican engineers, are employed on the canal. Immediately upon the transfer of the property to the United States, Admiral Walker telegraphed to continue the work without interruption.

Thus far, it has not been decided by the commission whether the work of construction shall be done by contract or directly by the commission. It is expected that when the construction work is in full swing several thousand men will be employed. The day laborers on the isthmus receive in wages about 50 cents a day, United States currency. They are generally good laborers.

Maj. Black of the corps of engineers of the United States Army, who returned recently from the isthmus after more than a year spent there in averaging conditions, had a talk with the President today. He expressed belief that the sanitary problem confronting the commission was not a secured one.

ALASKA MUCH DISAPPOINTED. ROAD LEGISLATION WAS WANTED

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] J. W. Ivey, one of the representatives of Alaska here during the session of Congress, called at the White House today. He said Alaska was greatly disappointed at the failure of Congress to enact legislation for the Territory.

"What we needed worst of all," said Mr. Ivey, "was legislation that would open roads. Hauling supplies is the worst and most costly feature of mining in Alaska. With good roads, there would be endless development in gold mining in the Territory and many millions of dollars would be added to the wealth of this country. There is gold everywhere in Alaska, but the cost of transporting food supplies without roads of any kind is so great that men hesitate at anything except that promising the largest return for money spent.

"Besides gold, we are now discovering oil in immense quantities; also the finest crude petroleum in the world, with coal in immense quantities. I expect to see Alaska furnish the world with oil before many years. The crude oil we find there can be burned in a lamp without refining."

ST. PAUL'S TRAVELS.

Interesting Translation of Old Coptic Manuscript Just Completed.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An interesting publication has just left the Herdborg Press. It is the "Acta Pauli," a narrative of the Apostle Paul's traveling experiences, which have not until now been known in their entirety. The compiler, Dr. Karl Schmidt, has spent seven years in piecing together two thousand small fragments of papyrus and translating their contents from Coptic handwriting. These Coptic manuscripts, Dr. Schmidt says, date from 180 A. D., and are from the hand of an elder of the Christian church, written "in honor of St. Paul and to combat agnostic heresies."

GEN. STOESSEL SAYS HE WILL NEVER SURRENDER.

Russians Accept Isolation of Port Arthur Stoically, Saying It Was a Foregone Conclusion — Garrison Consists of Twenty-two Thousand Men Well Equipped.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 7, 2:30 p.m.—The calmness with which the Russians accept the isolation of what always has been regarded as the Russian Gibraltar in the Far East, is remarkable. In military circles it had been considered inevitable from the first. No attempt is made to belittle the energy shown by the enemy, but from the strategic point of view, the investment of the fortress is regarded as relieving the military situation on the mainland, which had been much embarrassed by the necessity for maintaining the seagirt stronghold at the extremity of the Liao Tung Peninsula. Besides, the utmost confidence is expressed in the ability of the fortress to withstand a siege.

The whole of the lower end of the peninsula from Kin Chou, thirty miles above Port Arthur, south, is an intrenched camp, commanded by a chain of most formidable fortifications, which surmount the crest of every hill. Millions of roubles and years of work have been devoted to rendering the place impregnable by land or sea. The railroad circling within this camp will permit of the easy transportation of the defending troops.

According to the Russian view, the Japanese have a herculean task before them, in the event of their attempting the reduction of the fortress. Successive lines of defense must be carried, and the Japanese operations cannot begin at the advanced position of Kin Chou until their siege guns are landed. Gen. Stoessel, who will have supreme command of the defense of Port Arthur, is considered to be able and resourceful, and to have an indomitable will. His orders of the day have breathed a spirit of unyielding defense. One of them declared that the last man must die in the defense of Port Arthur.

The latest newspaper dispatches from the beleagured fortress contained an account of a stirring appeal made by Gen. Stoessel to his troops yesterday on the occasion of the review in honor of the Empress's name day, in which he announced that he would never surrender. In addition to the 10,000 sailors on board the ships at Port Arthur and the regular fortress artillery, probably numbering 2000 men, the defending force consists of a division of riflemen and three batteries of field artillery, a total of about 22,000 men.

In anticipation of the severance of communication, all the valuable public documents had been removed to Mukden and the work of supplying the fortress with provisions and ammunition had been progressing for weeks. The authorities apparently are satisfied that practically no non-combatants remain there. The inhabitants of Port Dalny were sent away some time ago.

The newspapers accept the news stoically, adjuring the people not to be discouraged, since the cutting off of Port Arthur was a foregone conclusion from the first. The Novoe Vremya says:

"The fortress and its defenders must now shift for themselves until our army in sufficient strength can come down from the north and rescue them. In the meantime the people must accustom themselves to be without direct news from Port Arthur."

FOR IMPORTING GIRLS.

St. Louis Woman Arraigned on Charge of Engaging in Bad Business Enterprise.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. LOUIS, May 7.—On complaint of Inspector Dunne of the United States Department of Commerce and Labor, Mrs. Sophie Wenzell was today arraigned before a United States commissioner on a charge of importing girls to St. Louis from Europe, especially from Germany, for improper and unlawful purposes.

The arrest followed the arrival here a week ago of ten girls from Germany. It is alleged by Dunne that they came to St. Louis in answer to advertisements in foreign papers offering good positions with good salary at light housekeeping in St. Louis. It was these advertisements, it is alleged, which first attracted the attention of the Department of Labor.

Mrs. Wenzell was held in $2000 bond pending a preliminary hearing next Monday. The girls will be taken care of by the Federal Labor Bureau pending the settlement of the case. The girls come from Munich.

Mrs. Wenzell was engaged, she asserted, by a company of St. Louis who have a concession on the Pike to secure Bavarian girls who could sell refreshments there. Mrs. Wenzell says she advertised for the girls in the Munich papers in good faith.

Dist.-Atty. Dyer said that under the statutes the steamship companies that brought the girls to America would have to return them.

THE GREAT WAR.

Ping, can compel the Rusians to evacuate Newchwang, or else undergo a battle or a state of siege. If the march is prosecuted as far as Hai Cheng, where the Japanese defeated the Chinese Army, Gen. Kouropatkin will have to abandon Mao Tien Pass as a consequence of the strategic weakness of the position.

A COIGN OF VANTAGE.

The possession of Feng Wang Cheng is of the highest importance, as it places under the control of the Japanese a large strip of Manchurian territory bordering on the Bay of Korea, and the road connecting Liao Yang, Hai Cheng, Newchwang and Pitsewo. The command of the road to Pitsewo will enable this army to communicate with the Japanese army to open operations in the Liao Tung peninsula.

The energy of the Japanese meets with unwilling admiration, and it is expected they will continue a vigorous campaign. The nation is fully awakened to what this means. It understands that Russia must exert all her strength and that a long war cannot be avoided. The latter opinion is shared by diplomats and officials.

Comfort is found in the fact that thus far Russia has not sustained a crushing defeat, and even should one come it is declared it would not shake the certainty of the people in the ultimate success of the Russian arms or lessen the determination to prosecute the war until Japan shall have been humbled.

CZAR DEEPLY PAINED.

The Emperor is deeply pained over the Russian losses on the Yalu, and regrets that the investment of Port Arthur could not have been prevented. He will, however, acquiesce without question in the plan of Gen. Kouropatkin, even should that plan mean the withdrawal of the Russian army further into the interior.

Those close to His Majesty state that he is more than ever determined that Russian prestige shall be vindicated in the Far East, a necessity not only to Russia, but to the whole white race, as an answer to the Japanese blows.

Further reinforcements have been dispatched to Manchuria, and the Emperor has reiterated his declaration that Gen. Kouropatkin shall have as many men as are needed to insure victory to the Russian arms.

There is no intention on the part of the authorities to depart from the programme outlined in the recent circular to the powers, whenever further defeats may be suffered. The depression here has given rise to rumors of all kinds of Russian disasters at Feng Wang Cheng and to the report that the Vladivostok squadron has been destroyed.

The former report, it is believed, grew out of Gen. Kouropatkin's retirement, and the admiralty places no credence in the story of the destruction of the squadron.

NEWS FROM MUKDEN. RUSSIAN TROOPS CHEERFUL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MUKDEN, May 6.—Still no foreign newspaper correspondents are allowed at Liao Yang, where all the foreign attachés are detained. Capt. William V. Judson of the engineer corps, U. S. A., who is to accompany the Russian army during hostilities, and Lieut. Newton A. McCully, the United States naval attaché, and others have been provided with quarters here.

The men on the troop trains passing through Mukden on their way to the front are in excellent spirits and express confidence in Russia's eventual success. They ask their officers when they may expect to reach Japan, and already want to know the Japanese names for tobacco, tea, and other articles.

Picturesque scenes are frequently witnessed at the wayside stations where the troops frequently remain over night. The soldiers are drawn up on the platforms, the bugles sound and then all uncover as the priest utters the evening prayer. Then the troops in each car, led by a tenor voice, break out into folk songs. The Chinese villagers with whom the soldiers quickly make friends, gather about, listening to the songs, which are mostly plaintive airs. The men, many of whom have been forty days on trains on their way from the interior of Russia are almost cheerful and join heartily in songs. The same good humor is shown by the troops after tiring marches through blinding duststorms and in the heat which is daily becoming more intense.

The Chinese commander of the district, accompanied by an escort attired in barbaric uniforms which contrasted strongly with their modern arms, waited at the station at Djandsun for an interview with Gen. Kouropatkin, who later reviewed the garrison here. A large concourse of Chinese assembled to witness the review.

at a saving of forty cents on every yard. It's a line that came Saturday, bought at a price little above half the regular market value. When you see them you'll not question either the STYLE or the QUALITY. It's a soft louisine finished taffeta in fine warp-printed mixtures, chameleon effects, brilliant, lustrous, and as handsome as any dollar-and-a-quarter silk to be found. Some come in the plain mixtures, others with small, neat, square jacquard dots the size of a pinhead. There are Cadet, French and Navy Blues, Tans, Browns, Lavenders, Heliotropes, Reds, Greens and Grays. If you have in mind a summer suit, or a waist, petticoat or lining—the silk is so far superior to most lining silks and no more expensive—you'll be on hand when the doors open at eight-thirty tomorrow.

FRANCE FEELS BAD AS RUSSIA.

MUCH DEPRESSION IN PARIS OVER JAP VICTORIES.

Investment of Port Arthur by the Japanese Considered an Accomplished Fact—Supreme Struggle is Likely to Take Place Near Mukden—China's Neutrality Assured.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, May 7.—The critical situation of Russia's land and sea forces excites feverish interest here, Russian reverses causing almost as much depression in Paris as at St. Petersburg.

The organization called Les Femmes de France turned over to the Russian embassy today two complete hospitals of 100 beds each. This organization is composed of women in large cities throughout France, including members of many noble families. Two more hospital outfits will be assembled shortly. The embassy sends this hospital to the front under the direction of the Empress, who is personally superintending the efforts of French women in behalf of the Russian wounded.

The official view is that Russia has suffered a serious blow. The Foreign Office had not received official confirmation that Port Arthur was completely invested by land and sea, but a leading official said:

"We accept the investment as an accomplished fact, for even if the harbor is not completely blocked an investment exists for all practical purposes. The landing is considered merely preliminary to a supreme struggle which will occur soon near Mukden. Upon this will largely depend the outcome of the war."

CHINESE NEUTRALITY.

Diplomatic negotiations during the week took a definite form to restrain China from joining Japan or otherwise breaking neutrality. The French Minister at Peking, and, it is understood, the ministers of all the powers, including the United States, joined in the representation. The results have been satisfactory, the imperial government giving a positive promise not to vary from a rigid observance of neutrality. Officials are somewhat doubtful of Chinese promises, as they recall that after a former declaration of neutrality China permitted "Black Flags" to assail French interests. However, China's positive declaration, backed by the identical position of the powers, is considered as reducing China's participation to a minimum.

SUBSTANTIAL SYMPATHY.

The readiness with which the Russian loan was placed in Paris was further evidence of French sympathy and a belief in the certainty of Russia's eventual success.

Although the outside amount Russia desired was $160,000,000, a single group of French bankers were ready to underwrite a $200,000,000 loan. American bankers say that no portion of the loan is likely to be taken in New York. It is pointed out that the placing of the Russian securities on the New York Stock Exchange has not yet proved the success that was expected. A leading Russian official here said that not a single Russian bond had been bought in America since the listing took place. The same official gave the following interesting account of how the Russian army in the Far East is paid:

"What payments made are in small Russian coins or notes. These notes are readily taken by the Chinese, who are familiar with Russian financial issues. The notes are then exchanged by station masters of the Eastern Chinese Railroad or agencies of the Russo-Chinese Bank at a rate of exchange fixed by the Minister of Finance, according to the price of silver in London. The confidence of the Chinese public in Russian notes is very great. The Russo-Chinese Bank keeps a silver fund to exchange notes in Manchuria, it being a significant fact that Russian notes are preferred to silver in Manchuria."

NOW FREE TO THRUST TRUSTS.

TOPEKA (Kan.) May 7.—The Supreme Court of Kansas today upheld the decision of District Judge Hazen, in the coal trust cases, so-called, who last winter sentenced two Kansas coal operators for contempt of court for refusing to answer questions put by a county attorney in a State investigation into the workings of an alleged coal combine. John Jack and John Bell, the operators, refused to testify on the ground that their testimony might incriminate them, and were sentenced to the county jail. They appealed to the Supreme Court for release on habeas corpus. The Supreme Court, while upholding the decision of the lower court, holds, however, that persons cannot be prosecuted for any disclosures they may make on the witness stand. The decision is of the utmost importance to the State, as it makes it possible for attorney and county attorneys to investigate alleged violations of the law by the trust.

SCHOONER THOUGHT LOST.

PORTLAND, May 8.—A special to the Oregonian from Victoria, B. C., says:

The sealing schooners Triumph and Umbrina, Capt. Blackstadt, of this port, are given up as lost at sea, with all hands, owing to the report made by Capt. Hann of the sealing schooner Jessie, which has just arrived from her cruise along the long coast from California to Queen Charlotte Islands. He picked up south of the Columbia River broken sealing boats and canoes, part of a schooner's rail davitt, and other tackle belonging to the schooner Umbrina, with which longing to the schooner Umbrina, with which The sealer then headed for the west coast of Vancouver Island to land her mate, who was very ill. Since then she has not been heard of and is long overdue.

The Umbrina was owned by Capt. Peppet, now in Eastern Canada. She carried a half-white, half-Indian crew, twenty-three all told, and was one of the largest of the fleet in Queen Charlotte Sound. Capt. Hann found a schooner's boom with sail attached, and from indications known to him he believes it belonged to the Triumph, also long overdue, and among the fleet now bound for the Siberian coast.

The Triumph carried a white crew of nineteen, and was the oldest and largest of the Victoria sealers. The owners have abandoned hope.

HAVE GRUDGE AGAINST GOSPEL.

EVANGELIST CAUSES GOMPERS'S TEETH TO GNASH.

[illegible] Had Mapped Out a Trades Union Campaign of Conversion for Rockford, Ill., but Workmen There are More Interested in Revival Than in Walking Delegates.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] William A. Sunday, the baseball player-evangelist, is accused by Arthur Ireland, organizer for the American Federation of Labor, of interfering with the formation of trades unions in Rockford, Ill. Several weeks ago Ireland went to Rockford to inaugurate a lively trades-union campaign.

Samuel Gompers had mapped out a lot of work, but the organizer was unable to arouse any interest in the trades-union idea among Rockford citizens. After several unsuccessful efforts he gave up the task and says the workingmen are too much interested in the revival to listen to walking delegates.

MORE STRIKERS RESTRAINED.

POINT RICHMOND ATTENDED TO.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—A United States Marshal went to Point Richmond today to serve a temporary restraining order against the striking employés of the Santa Fé Company at that place. The order was directed to J. R. Rowan and thirty other strikers.

It restrains them from interfering with the non-union machinists now employed at the railroad shops at Richmond, and also with the machinery and the work in the car and repair shops of the Santa Fé Company. It was made returnable May 16, when there will be heard in the United States Court a petition for an injunction against the striking machinists to restrain them from interfering with the non-union men and the shops.

NO FURTHER NEGOTIATIONS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

TOPEKA (Kan.) May 7.—"There will be no further negotiations with the striking machinists on the part of the Santa Fé Railroad," said General Manager Mudge this morning. "A notice will be posted in the shops today to the effect that all men who do not report for work Monday need make no further applications. Those detained by sickness must furnish a physician's certificate. Right now we have more men ready to go at work in the machine shops than the total number of machinists who have gone out."

TO TAKE STRIKERS' PLACES.

APPLICATIONS FLOOD SANTA FE.

The statement made by General Manager Wells of the Santa Fé that the strikers selected the worst time they could have found in the last two years in which to walk out, appears to be substantiated. His assistant, John R. [illegible], said yesterday: "We are flooded with applications from all over the East for positions in the [illegible] company. We could not [illegible] employment for all those who are willing to work in [illegible]. [illegible] interest in the strike situation [illegible] around the hearing of the [illegible] case, which is to come before Judge Wellborn in this city May [illegible]. The strikers have engaged the [illegible] of Thomas Fitch of San Bernardino, who will be associated with [illegible] Willis of the same city in [illegible] the case. When the temporary injunction was granted to the Santa Fé April 30 Judge Wellborn [illegible] to include in the order that any [illegible] of the strikers to hold conversation with the new men would be held in contempt of court, retaining his ruling until the issue had been argued. [illegible] this point there is legal interest, [illegible] precedent may be established by the decision of the judge.

The Santa Fé law department has obtained a restraining order against the [illegible] at Bakersfield and Fresno similar to the one granted against the [illegible] men at San Bernardino, Needles and other places in Southern California. [illegible] case will be heard here May 19.

WAR BULLETINS FROM MANY POINTS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SEOUL, May 7, 7:30 p. m.—Telegrams received here from Antung declare that the second Japanese army corps, besides having disembarked on the Liao Tung peninsula, has effected a landing at Takushan, on the Manchurian coast, about forty miles west of the mouth of the Yalu.

JAPANESE LOAN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, May 7.—Jacob Schiff, who in behalf of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. arranged to take half the Japanese loan, had a private audience with King Edward yesterday evening. This unusual incident is understood to have been due to the King's desire to express his appreciation at the fact that the United States and England are cooperating harmoniously in large financial undertakings. The Japanese loan is nominally quoted today at 3¼ per cent. premium.

RETREAT CONFIRMED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 7, 6:10 p.m.—The Russian retreat from Feng Wang Cheng is confirmed. The Japanese pressed the retreating troops, though with few losses to either side. The Japanese destroyed the railway at Port Adams, blowing up the bridges.

OMINOUS SILENCE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, May 7, 1:02 p.m.—The Russian capital has now been without news from Port Arthur for almost twenty-four hours. The last telegram received was filed at 6 o'clock last night. It is believed that the spot where the Japanese cut the railroad and telegraph lines is near Port Adams, opposite Pitsewo. No news of other landings on the Liao Tung Peninsula has reached the General Staff. Important developments are hourly expected from Feng Wang Cheng. News of heavy fighting there is anticipated shortly.

A telegram from Gen. Kouropatkin says Gen. Kuroki's army is advancing upon the Russian position in two divisions. The enemy, with artillery, he reports, has reached Kao Li Meun, called the "Gate of Korea," which is within ten miles of Feng Wang Cheng.

DECIDED NOT TO FIGHT.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 7.—According to a persistent rumor, Gen. Kuropatkin decided not to give battle at Feng Wang Cheng. The Russians have fallen back and the Japanese have occupied Feng Wang Cheng.

GEN. STOESSEL'S ORDER.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PORT ARTHUR, May 6.—Friday.—[Delayed in transmission.] Lieut.-Gen. Stoessel has issued an order to the troops of his command as follows:

"On April 30 and May 1 the enemy crossed the Yalu River in great force and our troops fell back to positions which had been previously selected.

"Yesterday the enemy effected an important landing on the Liao Tung peninsula, south of Pitsewo, and in the vicinity of Kin Chou Bay. Now our work is beginning. Naturally the enemy will destroy railway communication and endeavor to drive our troops back to Port Arthur and besiege this fortress, Russia's bulwark in the Far East. We will defend it until the arrival of the troops which are coming to relieve us.

"I consider it my duty to call upon you to display unceasing vigilance and caution, and you must be ready at all times to demean yourselves toward your general with the dignity and order beseeming the glorious troops of Russia. No matter what happens, you must not lose your heads, but remember that everything is possible in war and that we shall be able, with God's help, to cope with the arduous task imposed upon us."

AS VIEWED IN LONDON.

CONFIDENCE IN THE JAPS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, May 7.—Quiet confidence continues to prevail that the Japanese, in their own good time, will carry out all their carefully arranged plan of campaign on the Liao Tung Peninsula, which is now generally regarded as being practically in Japanese hands.

In diplomatic quarters no events are expected, either in the shape of a Chinese breach of neutrality or of the mediation of some power which would interfere with the normal course of the war. Foreign Secretary Lansdowne has received explicit information which leads him to the belief that there is no danger of the Chinese failing to maintain strict neutrality. The Chinese Minister called at the Foreign Office here this week and so assured Lord Lansdowne. An attempt at mediation, according to the general opinion in official and diplomatic circles, must, for the present at any rate, be postponed.

At the Japanese legation it is thought that Russia does not intend to make a very determined resistance at Port Arthur. In support of this idea it is pointed out that Russia already has largely depleted her garrison at Port Arthur, and thta Viceroy Alexieff's departure from there hardly seems a step that would be adopted by a commander who desired to risk everything to keep up the morale of his troops and enable them to withstand a prolonged siege. The Japanese officials here do not count so much upon the Japanese commander succeeding in starving out Port Arthur, as on the inevitable demoralization which they believe will spread among the already rather disheartened sailors and soldiers at Port Arthur, and which must necessarily be heightened by a constant sea bombardment, menace by the land forces and complete isolation.

As regards the land fighting in Manchuria, and the disposition of the other mysterious Japanese armies, Baron Hayashi said today: "You may be pretty sure that the Japanese will not undertake any engagement in the near future unless our forces outnumber those available by the Russian commander, and I think you will find the superiority of numbers will generally, for the present, at any rate, be on our side."

Big Lockout in Vienna.

VIENNA, May 7.—The Builders' Association today locked out 4500 bricklayers, stone masons and laborers. This step was taken for the purpose of defeating strikes on certain buildings, the completion of which is urgently necessary. The employers are confident that the present step will compel the men to accept their terms.

Would Sell Their Skins.

One hundred dollars an inch for three square inches of cuticle attracted fifty women to the office of the physician in Brooklyn, who had made the offer. He is Dr. A. J. Fulton, of No. 137 St. Mark's avenue, and his request is for sufficient skin with which to cover an unsightly abrasion on the throat of a wealthy patient. She is a woman of prominence, and as the bruise is in a prominent place she insists the color of the grafted skin must match her own—which is a decided brunette.

Not being accustomed to matching ribbons, the physician had an interesting time with the women who were willing to give up a small part of their cuticle for the $300 his rich patient had offered. Although he had asked that nobody but brunettes apply, his applicants ranged from peaches and cream to chocolate.

"But you are blonde, you know," he said to one handsome young applicant.

"It's bleached," she confessed, tossing back her fluffy hair. "See this," and she rolled up her baggy sleeve.

"Too dark," said the doctor.

Another woman wanted to know if he couldn't take the graft cuticle off where her vaccination mark was, so I wouldn't show so much, and still another asked why he couldn't scalp some other place than the arm. She frequently appeared in evening gowns, and—— "Well, you know, doctor, while there may be low necks and short sleeves once in a while, stockings are always high."

He confessed there was a general impression to that effect, but was compelled to part with her reluctantly. She was the exact shade of his wealthy brunette, but wouldn't part with the skin on those immaculate arms—not for a million. In vain he explained it must come from the arm, and preferably the left, as the texture and color there best suited the blotch he intended to cover up.

In the rush of visitors the doctor had time to give attention to a man who entered his office on tiptoe.

"Say," he whispered hoarsely, "will it hurt?"

"No," said the doctor, "but the dentist is around the corner."

"Oh, it's not a tooth. I'm after that $300."

"But I wouldn't give 10 cents for your whole hide."

"It's not mine; it's my wife's. She won't come, but if we can make a deal——"

Last night the physician refused to say if he had made any choice. The impression is, however, the skin-grafting operation is now going on for the benefit of his wealthy patient, and a woman who can afford to lose a little cuticle for $300.—[New York Press.

Mr. Roosevelt's Timely Hint.

On the occasion of his address Thursday evening at the banquet of the Periodical Publishers' Association, President Roosevelt gave utterance to a sentiment which, we feel sure, will command cordial approval in all quarters:

"We have a very large field for working against evil here at home. When we have made things all as they should be in nation, State and municipality here at home, then we can talk about reforming the rest of mankind; but meanwhile let us begin at home."

There can be no two opinions as to the wisdom, the propriety and the kindness involved in this injunction. Our Savior preached it in the parable of the mote and the beam. The thought is immortalized in the "Golden Rule." It lives in a thousand ancient saws and pregnant aphorisms. Reform, like charity, begins at home—or should begin there. And the President points the way to the truest and the noblest Christianity when he counsels us to see to our own morals before we undertake to regulate the morals of others. Sages and philosophers of all lands and ages have put this precept first among the rules of righteous conduct. It is the corner-stone of every wholesome creed—of every worthy ritual, religious or political. Mr. Roosevelt never spoke a wiser word, and it is well to bear in mind the fact that he seasoned theory with substance in no uncertain fashion. He did not content himself with saying that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones; he told us—as is the solemn truth—that our dwelling is constructed of particularly brittle and transparent stuff. It was a brave and timely utterance. Every thoughtful and right-minded citizen will thank him for it.—[Washington Post.

TO OUR VISITORS:

The Gospel of California will be carried home by ten thousand (10,000) enthusiastic, energetic men, who have the sinews of might strong in their hearts and heads and minds, and preached broadcast to their peoples as never before. Do you realize that we are educating ten thousand lecturers for California, right here and now? Ten thousand firebrands of the Gospel, who will soon go out to kindle warmth in the hearts of—say—each man a thousand of his flock and kindred and make them long for the abundant life of California, the greatest gift of nature to man?

Probably never before has such an opportunity for scattering California sunshine to the peoples of the earth been possible and what are we doing about it, we Angelenos? Are we throwing the burden upon the few, or are we each and everyone saying "welcome," "tell it out," "come over and help us," by every hand shake and every smile and every little courtesy extended to these visiting leaders of their communities?

The principal thing which we wish to impress upon the minds of every sojourner in our land is that there never was a better time, place or opportunity to make investments or buy homes than right now, today, in Los Angeles, the City of the Angels, and that we, the Erkenbrecher Syndicate, have on our realty lists more and better bargains than ever before in our history, and we courteously and cordially solicit a call from each and every one of you.

POLITICAL.

THE THREAT OF TOM HAYS.

Brought Former Lieutenants to the Ringbolt.

Story of Deal by Which He Got Out of Jail.

Gang Making Every Effort to Elect Morse.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RIVERSIDE, May 7.—The dismissal of the cases against Tom Hays in the Superior Court yesterday was part and parcel of a political bargain entered into between those whom Hays controls as a result of a threat which Hays sent out from the County Jail to those about whom he knows more than they would like to have the public know.

Bradford Morse, candidate for Supervisor, expected to be benefited politically by his efforts in Hays's behalf. From a former foe of the Hays crowd Morse has turned over to that side of the political fence. He is now admitted by the Hays-Noyes gang to be their candidate, and as such he will go before the county convention Tuesday. If he wins there, it will be claimed as a victory for and a vindication of the Hays crowd and their methods. If he is beaten—and the present indications are that he will be—it will be a signal victory for clean politics.

Opposing him is Harry Bantz, a man who has been in Riverside for years and who has never been an office-seeker. He has always been an opponent of the grafters who have within the past few years disgraced Riverside official life. Even when Hays was at the height of his power, Bantz correctly took his measure and opposed him in every political deal. Even the most rabid Hays partisans admit that there has never been a question as to his honesty. He is making a clean fight, making no promises except that if elected he will endeavor to give the people a business administration and an honest accounting for the money which the Board of Supervisors may expend. He stated today that rather than tie up to any gang he would quit the race. He is not a politician, but simply an able, honest business man thoroughly familiar with county affairs and unalterably opposed to anything about which there is the least suspicion of grafting. His presence upon the board would prevent such men as Kimball and Shaver from repeating some of the things which caused them to be indicted by the grand jury.

HOW TOM GOT OUT.

How Tom Hays dictated his own release from jail, and how Morse was dragged into his camp make an interesting chapter in the political history of the county.

Some time ago Hays wanted one of the members of the present Board of Supervisors to become his bondsman and sent him word to that effect. The Supervisor concluded that if he consented the people would declare that he was forced to do so, and he therefore declined. Hays said to his messenger: "Go to Fred and tell him and tell Pim Evans and Judge Noyes that I'm getting d——d tired of staying here and I am about ready to do some interesting talking. They better be doing something."

The message was delivered, and among those whom Hays has under his thumb it caused consternation. They realized that something had to be done, for there are people in Riverside who would themselves occupy prison cells if Hays told all he knows. District Attorney Evans was consulted and he at first would not consent to a dismissal of the Hays case unless that action was recommended by a number of prominent citizens. Certain men of prominence were approached and asked to make such a recommendation, but they refused.

It so happened that Morse needed the support of a certain man of considerable prominence, and to him it was suggested that he advise Evans to move a dismissal of the cases. The day before the court took action Morse and Judge Noyes were closeted with Hays's personal representative, P. T. Evans, in the latter's office. Whether Morse really recommended what was demanded by Hays is not a matter of record, but a political compact was entered into, the terms of which were that the cases against Hays were to be dismissed absolutely and without "strings" and in consideration certain support was to be given to Morse in his race for Supervisor.

The following day the cases were dismissed, but Noyes made the dismissals conditional upon the issuance of new complaints against Hays. This was considered by the man who was to deliver the political goods to be a breach of faith, and he therefore refused to perform his part of the agreement. The result is that Morse was tied to the Hays gang without having received the support to secure which the political deal was made. Three additional complaints and warrants were issued against Hays, and but for the fact that District Attorney Evans is now violating his oath of office in not endeavoring to enforce the laws of the State of California Hays would again be in jail before another day passed.

Every possible effort has been made by the Morse supporters to keep this matter secret. It was feared that if it became public it would ruin his chances of securing the Republican nomination next Tuesday, because there are those who devoutly hope that the Republican county convention on that day will repudiate and rebuke Hays and all his henchmen.

The contest for the nomination for Supervisor will be so close that at present it is impossible to predict the result; but Harry Bantz appears to have the advantage, and the fact that the Hays outfit is endeavoring to cause his defeat probably will be turned to his advantage.

From no less an authority than P. T. Evans, who has long been practically Tom Hays's chief of staff, comes the statement that Hays will attend the county convention on Tuesday. Amazing as that may seem it is comparatively nothing to what Evans adds to it by saying that in order to get even with certain political enemies Hays proposes to place the name of Miguel Estudillo in nomination for Assemblyman, his purpose being to cause the defeat of Estudillo, who has his fight for that office practically won and who is an opponent of the Hays gang.

Evans spread this report broadcast today and the effect of it was to materially strengthen Estudillo's chances. Even some of Hays's friends asserted openly that if Hays attends the convention and attempts any such underhand politics, they themselves will present resolutions calling for his removal from the convention floor and for the elimination of his influence from Riverside affairs.

One of the attorneys for Hays stated that he would advise his client to leave Riverside until after the convention, but his more rabid followers declare that he will attend that convention and endeavor to secure the nomination of men known to be friendly to himself. If he appears there will be more excitement Tuesday than ever occurred in any political gathering in the county. Hays is not a political fool and his opponents do not believe he will give them any such chance to make political mincemeat of him. They would like to see him attempt to carry out that threat, for it would mean a death blow to his gang.

ESTUDILLO A WINNER.

As the time for the county convention approaches the brighter become the prospects of success of Miguel Estudillo in his race for the Republican nomination for Assemblyman. He will come into Riverside with a large majority of the country delegates, and in every city precinct except the fifth he appears to have more than an even chance with Frank Lewis, who is a candidate for renomination. Whether he likes it or not, Lewis is carrying the handicap of the support of Judge Noyes, Tom Hays and the rest of that gang, and to them he is their candidate. On the other hand, Estudillo has made no promises and has waged an honest, manly fight against that gang. The opponents of grafting here believe in him, and, despite the efforts of the Hays outfit to bring out another candidate, knowing as they do that Lewis has lost his fight, Estudillo has continued to gain strength.

Corona will send twenty-two delegates to the convention and eleven of them are believed to be supporters of Estudillo. The fight there has been over Matt Findley, formerly a Democrat, but more recently the candidate of the Hays-Noyes-Evans gang to displace Chairman C. O. Barker of the Republican County Central Committee. Findley was turned down at the recent primaries, and unless he secures a proxy he will not appear on the floor of the convention as an active participant. Findley is a Hays striker. He was a Daniels delegate two years ago, but this year his effort to butt into the councils of the party appears to have been a failure.

At Highgrove J. T. Dart, a former Hays agent, was turned down at the primaries and had it been known what I. B. Haas would do he probably would have met the same fate. It is said that Haas promised to deliver the delegation for Bantz, but after his election, through "pressure," he is said to have gone over to Morse, the Hays candidate.

San Jacinto will send a solid delegation of seven who will support Estudillo and oppose Lewis. Accompanied by a Hays press agent, Lewis visited San Jacinto yesterday, but was told that he would not get a vote from that delegation. Fred Hards and George B. Hannas were the Hays agents in the caucuses. The latter was chosen as delegate upon his absolute promise that he would adhere to the unit rule and support Estudillo.

Hemet will send Editor Peter Milliken to the convention. He wants to be permanent chairman, but that question has not been decided. Hemet has six delegates and heretofore Milliken has been considered a Hays supporter, but that was in the palmy days of the deposed boss, and now Milliken appears to be supporting Estudillo, who will receive the vote of the entire delegation.

Perris is a town which Hays could not control. Charles Geiger, Louis Leeman and Al Kimball have been doing his politics there, but they have been defeated repeatedly, and the six votes from Perris will be cast against the Hays candidate.

Temecula, which has only two votes, is still dominated by the Hays influence. M. Machado is the Hays agent there and is also a client of William Collier, and he controls the machinery of the party. He will of course support Lewis.

Elsinore has four votes, and the present indications are that Lewis will receive one of them and Estudillo the other three.

Banning, the home of C. O. Barker, the county chairman, has as its Hays representative C. A. Reid. Five delegates will be sent to the convention, all of them practically certain to vote for Estudillo.

West Riverside, the precinct adjoining that in which Lewis lives, partly purged itself of Hays influence at the primaries, when it defeated L. S. Wilson. Ben Smith, another Hays striker, was chosen as a delegate, but there are four other delegates, who will oppose him and the Hays candidates.

The convention will be composed of 228 delegates, and 115 votes will be necessary to a choice.

He is the author of "Millennial Dawn," which is produced in six or seven volumes, and the head of the sect or denomination. RAISIN MARKET HURT.

Cutting Prices After Certain Figure Was Guaranteed Arouses Some Protests.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 2.—Whoever is responsible for the mix-up in California raisins has done the industry more harm than can be corrected in many months. The announcement of a price in February, guaranteed to the end of the season, and then cutting that figure almost in two three months afterward, and that, too, so late in the season that almost no buying will be done, is a suicidal policy which will have its influence for years to come. It has destroyed what confidence the trade in the East had left in the association, which wasn't much. And the men who have done it should be turned out and never allowed to understake any of the management of the association affairs in the future.

The reduction announced is 2½ cents below the originally announced figures. Such a cut as that leaves several large jobbers with stocks on hand which mean serious loss. And they refuse to invest anything further, being under the impression that cutting having begun, it will continue as long as there is any of that 25,000 tons of carry-over to sell. It is, of course, impossible to say at this end who is responsible for this deal, but one man here, the senior partner of the firm of Guggenheim Bros., has had a good deal to say since he came here. He declares that he has sold 3000 tons within the past few days, but everyone else says not any have been sold, excepting for supplying immediate requirements. It would be well for growers to investigate what is going on, the same as the orange growers are doing. They might learn much that would be to their interest.

Eighty-three cents written in red ink, written in his blood.

"What are we to do? The condition is desperate. California raises more oranges than all other countries put together, and yet under the agency her growers will starve. That agency is guilty of criminal mismanagement. It is worse than that. I cannot express the enormity of the crime which is laid at its door. Like a farmer who measures his colts all the way up, joint by joint, and then judges how tall a horse it will make, so when the merger was formed we measured it and decided that it would make a great hoss. Measure it today. It's a mere hackney, no, just a kicking, bucking bronco, and it has thrown us.

"What are we going to do? We are going to break that combine. We are going to disband its members and ditch those fellows who have been getting the $2000, $3000 or $4000 a year, while the growers get the red, the red that is almost blood. The hoss is dead. It is too dead and cold to skin."

Col. Booty took the floor again and told of the case of Boheim of Santa Ana, who shipped 400 boxes of oranges through the agency and received a check for $1.89 as his net return.

"It was his only income, and the poor old man died. We buried him and left his sons to struggle on with the desperate fight. There was absolutely no word of explanation sent with that check, no word of hope for better returns in the future, just the appalling figures in red. They have robbed me, my children and my neighbors, and while I bear no man of that union any personal grudge, I will fight it to the death and unearth the rottenness that stinks and drives us from our homes."

After other minor remarks, the meeting adjourned to meet at Covina at 10 a.m. next Thursday. Among the growers present was Eli Messenger of Alhambra, who was for fourteen years manager of the Stoneman ranch, and who has been a producer of oranges for thirty-four years. He shipped the first box of the golden fruit ever sent East from Southern California. It was consigned to H. P. Stanley & Sons of Chicago, and was hauled in a box car attached to a passenger train. The freight was $500, but the shipment brought in large returns.

E. J. Oatman of Riverside backs the idea of a local auction market and favors Colton as the place of sale. A. P. Collins of Highgrove also favors this plan.

"Sending the fruit East under present methods is like driving a horse from Los Angeles to San Bernardino, and putting it in a man's stable, and then telling him you have sold him a horse," he said. "Is that so?" asks the man. "Well, how much do you want?" "Two hundred dollars." "Well, I will give you $50." "It is a case of take the $50 or drive the horse back to Los Angeles. You take the fifty, and you call yourself a fool."

D. D. Gage of Riverside had little to say, but is in the fight, and seconded most of the motions made at the meeting. A. P. Griffith of Azusa, W. E. Pile of Monrovia, E. F. Pinkham of Los Angeles, J. P. Scott of San Bernardino and J. Peycke of this city know that some trouble is brewing, and will not ship oranges through any union in the future.

It was stated that all officers of the union had been invited to attend yesterday's meeting. None of them were present.

HERESY FLAMES WARM UP FIRST SENSATION OF THE BIG CONFERENCE.

Accused Clergymen Show Great Emotion in Repelling the Charges. Heavy Guns of Methodism Will Shoot Holes in Munhall—Spirited Debates on Floor of Pavilion.

YESTERDAY witnessed the opening of the campaign of Evangelist Munhall and the Bible League of Bishop Mallalieu against the higher critics.

It has been thought that their recent defeat in an attempt to dislodge Prof. Borden P. Bowne from his professorship in Boston University from the ministry had put a quietus upon their efforts to stir up trouble. But their courage rises with defeat, and now they make a hot attack upon the men who conducted that trial in the New York East Conference last month and enlarge the base of operations by branding as heterodox two of the oldest and strongest theological schools of the church.

Yesterday morning the delegates found upon their chairs copies of Dr. Munhall's little periodical that was "red with tooth and claw." It had a broadside for Dr. Buckley, the counsel of Prof. Bowne in the recent trial. Munhall all along has charged that the editors of the Advocate were cowardly in not attacking heretical teachers and now says openly that he knew as soon as Prof. Bowne was accused and that the famous editor of the New York Advocate was to act as counsel in his defense, that the trial would be but a farce and result in acquittal. He further intimates that the jury was packed with Bowne's personal friends. As Dr. George P. Mains and Dr. W. V. Kelley were members of the Committee of Trial, and other men of high position and wide repute, they all feel incensed that their fairness and fearlessness should thus be impugned. It is believed that Dr. Buckley and other distinguished members of the New York East Conference will ask the personal privilege on Monday of rebuking Dr. Munhall in open conference, and of asking that hereafter the Hall Committee refuse to allow indiscriminate distribution of all sorts of circulars.

DR. DAY ARRAIGNED.

Dr. Day, the chancellor of Syracuse University, and one of the leading candidates for the episcopacy, is also severely arraigned by these reactionists. Munhall charges Day with open statements on the platform and in the pulpit favoring extreme higher criticism. Dr. Day's friends assert that the distinguished chancellor has denied this in a letter to the evangelist and supported his version by further letters to Munhall from hearers of the addresses, but that Munhall refuses to accept denials and goes right ahead making over and over again the same assertions. Dr. Day is known as a man of iron and it is predicted that he will reply on the floor of the conference and challenge the veracity of Munhall. The Bible League seems determined to defeat Dr. Day for the episcopacy, and the great majority of the delegates interviewed resent their tactics. In the meantime the evangelist goes ahead preaching the gospel of "peace on earth, good will toward men," and of the Golden Rule. The hint was given out late last night that the Evangelistic Committee may be requested to withdraw Munhall from the field of evangelism while here.

At the afternoon session of the Committee on Education memorials were received from several conferences, and among them the one framed by Rev. Harcourt W. Peck at the last session of the Southern California Conference, demanding investigation of certain teachers in Garrett Biblical Institute of Evanston, Ill., and of Boston School of Theology. These kept up the fight of the early morning—a fight that will be most bitter on the conference floor. Go meet the onslaught. Dr. Milton S. Terry has published a strong pamphlet whose keynote is Wesley's note of freedom, "think and let think." President Little of Garrett has compiled the reports of all the boards of visitors appointed by many annual conferences during the past four years, who have swooped down upon the school at various intervals to investigate its work. These reports are unanimous in their praise of the teachings and teachers and will tend to silence all irresponsible criticism.

The bishops' address severely condemned "callow and shallow Biblical criticism," but they maintain that they did not intend to apply such an epithet to men like Drs. Gerry, Day, Bowne, Bashford and Mitchell, but merely to warn young ministers from taking up too readily with novel opinions and being misled by German rationalism.

Will there be an "Andover Heresy" or a "Briggs trial" in Methodism was yesterday's all-absorbing question.

And allied to it is the further question as to whether Drs. Buckley and Day will not pummel Evangelist Munhall next week in the conference beyond all recognition.

REV. WM. P. THIRKIELD,
Corresponding Secretary Freedman's Aid and Southern Educational Society.

AGAINST MUNHALL.
HOT IN COMMITTEE.

The meeting of the Committee on Education further developed the feature of the day in connection with the General Conference.

Dr. George H. Bridgeman, president of Hamline University, Minn., presided over the deliberations of the committee, and showed himself an able and impartial chairman under somewhat trying circumstances.

Immediately after the organization the reading of memorials was taken up, and soon developed some red-hot material, which seemingly did not belong to the Committee on Education, but they finally decided to run it through their hopper. There were sundry memorials bringing charges against certain theological institutions of the church for alleged heretical teachings, which it was thought by many should go to the Committee on State of the Church, but it was determined to place them in the hands of a special committee of seven.

The greater sensation, however, was the bringing of charges against Dr. L. W. Munhall, who is announced to conduct evangelistic meetings in Hazard's Pavilion every Sunday evening during the conference, the first of which will be held tonight.

Dr. Munhall was denounced in strong terms for an unfair and un-Christian pursuits of schools which he and others have charged are engaged in "higher criticism" of the Bible, and this matter also goes into the hands of the special committee of seven.

In the memorials against the schools the Boston University, Syracuse University and the Garret Biblical Institute at Evanston, Ill., were mentioned by name.

Most of the expressions on the floor were of decided sympathy with the institutions complained of. Dr. James R. Day, chancellor of Syracuse University, took the floor not only in defense of his own institution, but denounced in the strongest but dignified terms the bitetr attacks of the assailants upon the schools in general. He said these attacks affected the church at large inasmuch as they diverted money and students in other directions, and caused the greatest dissatisfaction in the minds of those who had been instrumental in establishing some of the schools, and caused them to hesitate about giving further assistance.

The burning address of the session was made by Dr. J. L. Little, president of Garrett Biblical Institute. He was so filled with emotion that it was with the greatest difficulty that he spoke, and at times he was most vehement in his denunciation of the wrongs that he claimed were being heaped upon him, though he at all times confined himself to the most careful and unobjectionable language. He was given unlimited time without interruption.

The charges against the Biblical Institute came from Des Moines Conference, and was numerously signed and to the persons who signed the memorial he gave most of his attention.

"It is high time," he said, "that we are given that protection which is guaranteed us by the constitution of the General Conference, which is to the effect that no minister shall be tried for any claimed offense outside of his own conference. We have been viciously and persistently pursued by these people, and no one of them ever wrote a word to me on the subject, nor did any one of them ever speak to me concerning the wrongs of which they complain."

The Committee on Education has on its roster the names of many college professors and presidents, and one of the members almost under his breath contended that the proposed committee of seven should be a wise and sensible one, which would digest the subject matter of the memorials and bring none of the miserable details before the General Conference.

The chair once stopped proceedings to say that he suspected the presence of a reporter in the meeting, but as nothing had been said on that subject he merely wished to call the attention of the committee to his suspicions. The lady to whom he referred said that she was merely making some notes for her own guidance, and the discussion was continued.

One of the members spoke strongly to the effect that these charges against certain schools had been going on so long and were so persistently made that it was time that the whole church took cognisance of them.

"We must meet them fair and square," he declared, "and there must be no whitewashing."

Dr. John L. Pitner of Los Angeles spoke forcefully in the same direction, saying:

"We who reside so far from the scene of these complaints feel their force because people are more ready to believe them than those who are in closer touch, and I believe it to be imperative that no professors nor college presidents be placed upon this committee of seven. Let us meet the charges honestly and fairly, and dispose of them once and for all."

This same sentiment was voiced by several others and the chair announced that he could be trusted to comply with the suggestion. The committee was not announced before adjournment, but will probably be named at the next meeting of the full committee on Tuesday.

COMMITTEES IN CONFLICT.

CONFERENCE DOES AWAY WITH SOME "SPECIALS."

Question of Amusements and Individual Communion Cups Arrouses Conference, Presaging a Battle Royal When Consideration is Undertaken.

Controversial lightning began to flash yesterday at the regular session of the General Conference, presaging the clashing of elements and the thunderings of heated debate.

That there are conflicting elements in the church has already been evidenced in the preliminary "frays" and the battle of the giants is only deferred until the standing and special committees shall have brought in some specific recommendation or measure touching the questions of moment that have been discussed in the annual conferences and in the church press.

Throughout the conference a spirit of uneasiness and expectancy is manifested and the impression is general that before this conference is dismissed legislation that will prove of historical interest will have been enacted.

For the first time politics were put to the fore yesterday and there was considerable wire-pulling and an evident scoring for place. Dr. Buckley precipitated the conflict in a plea made for a segregation of interests and the defining of the duties of the several standing committees.

Since the organization of the conference the tendency has been to create special committees, taking from the standing bodies much of responsibility and authority. These committees have been formed without first suspending the committees to which the special matters named would naturally revert.

Dr. Buckley characterised the situation as quite similar to one of Biblical record when a great commotion was created because the assembly was one part Sadducees and one part Pharisees. Papers and memorials had been sent to both special and regular committees, and confusion was the result.

A DEMURRER.

To this James W. Gamble of Cincinnati demurred. He admitted a conflict of authority, but the matter had been carefully considered in his committee, that of State of the Church, and there was a unanimity of expression as to their rights and privileges. By rights the interest of the superannuates belonged to the Committee on the State of the Church, and there was no excuse for a special body to consider the subject. Mr. Gamble was ready with a resolution defining the rights claimed.

Dr. E. R. Dille of Oakland also had a club for the special-committee fad. He deprecated the tendency and declared it to be unreasonable to assume that a committee of fifteen was as fully qualified to deal with the superannuates as a committee made up of two lay and two ministerial representatives from each conference. He wanted the special committee dispatched forth.

Dr. A. B. Leonard emphasised the necessity of immediate execution and hinted at the possibility of there being something of politics back of this special-committee project. It looked like an attempt at manipulation.

Dr. H. W. Key, colored, of Tennessee, also took a hand in the debate. Whatever this speaker lacked in vocabulary was more than overbalanced by his earnestness. He proved a veritable "black man eloquent." He had a great big heart full of sympathy for the "pore old 'superannuated' preachers, who are usually 'renegated' to the boneyard to die, unknown, unwept, unsung." He wanted a special committee to take special care of the non-effective preacher.

NO SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

With unanimous consent the "special committee" was dispatched and "its place knows it no more."

Hard won and as earnestly fought as was this contest, the same point was again raised in seeking to deal with the amusement question. Both the special and standing committees expressed a willingness to act, but the one was just as willing to hand the troublesome matter to the other and vice versa.

With recurrence of the question many of the great men of the church essayed to take a hand in the discussion. Among them were Dr. King, Dr. Lyttle, C. P. McClelland, Dr. E. M. Taylor, Dr. M. T. B. Rice, Robert Forbes and Dr. Buckley.

Facetiously the latter reviewed his first General Conference experience with reference to committee work and the difficulty sometimes encountered in determining just where a matter belonged. This question of a revision of the rules regulating amusements was sent to the Committee on Revision. Dr. Buckley thought it a matter for the Committee on the State of the Church. In proof he pulled the discipline on the conference "reading the law and giving the interpretation thereof." It was maintained that to change a provision was to change the law of the church, hence not within the province of a body vested only with power to revise.

The matter went to the Committee on the State of the Church.

ELECTION OF STEWARDS.

Another question that gives promise of extended debate was raised yesterday by Dr. A. S. Treaver. Under the call of conferences he introduced a resolution providing for the election of stewards by the individual congregations throughout the connections. Heretofore these officers have been nominated by the pastor in charge and confirmed by the quarterly conference of each separate charge. In support of his motion, Dr. Treaver said: "The church is suffering from the lack of democracy. The membership is often apathetic, due, I think, to the fact that the few in each charge usually 'run things.' If the stewardship was made up of members chosen by the congregation, interest would soon be awakened, there would be an increase of revenue and the charge that the pastor manipulates his quarterly conference to his own benefit would be less recurrent."

The motion was referred to the Committee on Temporal Economy.

COMMUNION CUPS.

The individual communion cup bobbed up serenely several times during the session. It is a question that will draw the fire of some of the biggest guns of the assembly when it is reported by the committee for action. Division on the question has been developing during the quadrennium, and in some sections strife has been engendered. On one occasion an annual conference assigned to Bishop Fowler provided the individual cups for the preliminary service. He positively refused to administer the sacrament under such circumstances. Bishop Walden registered a like protest when confronted in a similar way, on the ground that the law of the church made no provision for the innovation, and that the preceding General Conference had frowned upon the proposed change.

The matter was brought before the conference yesterday by Dr. C. S. Nutter of Vermont. He offered a resolution providing that whenever two-thirds of the stewards of any individual charge desired it, permission to use the individual cup should be granted. In support of his motion, Dr. Nutter made a plea on the ground of cleanliness and health. He implored the conference to gaze upon the serene face of Wesley, enframed above the rostrum, who stood as the apostle of cleanliness. This reference was meant to be effective and impressive. Instead the conference could not withhold a hearty laugh.

Dr. Nutter then took a new tack. He tried to picture a communion cup begrimmed and becrummed from promiscuous contact with the lips of "dirty men." This was too much for the delegates, and the speaker was greeted with groans and a chorus of "No-No's."

Undaunted, Dr. Nutter tried again, basing his plea in the nature of a demand for the exercise of liberty in nonessentials. "The church gives the privilege of choice in baptism and in the matter of standing or kneeling; why not in the matter of the administration of the sacrament?"

As Dr. Nutter concluded, the conference arose as one man, each delegate demanding recognition. Bishop Mullalieu, who was presiding, by the exercise of good judgment, diverted a storm. Recognizing a sane, level-headed delegate, a motion to refer to the Committee on the State of the Church was carried before the speaker had time to reach his seat.

This was thought to be the last of the cup, until it might emerge from the committee room, but it bobbed up again, though in a modified and amusing form.

"ADS." IN CHURCH PAPERS.

Dr. H. C. Clippinger had a motion. It was in the nature of a request to the publishers of the church papers, asking them to desist from publishing advertisements of firms exploiting the virtues of the individual communion cup.

This request looked so ridiculous the conference roared with laughter. But Dr. Clippinger insisted. He was making a plea for consistency. He gave his reasons for making the request. He said: "My first impressions of the individual cup were gained from the writings of Dr. Buckley in the Advocate. He made me believe the innovation cannot be otherwise than vicious and irreverant. Imagine my surprise from week to week, as I open my Advocate, to there meet face to face an advertisement commending the individual cup."

RESOLUTIONS.

During the roll call of the conference the following resolutions were introduced:

For the appointment of an Evangelistic Committee, one member from each district and three bishops.

For the creation of a special committee to consider the needs of the German adjunct to the church, to be composed of the conferences constituting the thirteenth general district.

For the revision of the ritual, eliminating ambiguous expression, and for a plainer designation of the part to be taken by the pulpit and the pew.

For the consideration of the proposition looking toward a federation of the benevolent societies.

Also committees on Judiciary, City Evangelization, Conference Claimants, International and Industrial Peace, and Credentials.

During the closing moments of the session Bishop Warren, as a matter of high privilege, called the attention of the conference to a gift from the missions of Southern Asia. The tender is in the nature of a peculiarly designed table having on its four sides medallions of Wesley, Coke, Butler, and Bishop Thoburn, all in different woods. There are also appropriate inscriptions in various languages. The table-top is an inlaid map of the mission field, with every mission indicated by circles and squares. The table is valued at $1000.

Conference Choir.

Many singers are wanted in Hazard's Pavilion at tonight's service to form a competent choir. As the regular choirs of the city are all busy with the many Sunday church appointments volunteer singers who desire to assist will be of great help to the music committee.

BOOK CONCERN OPEN BOOK.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE WON'T BE SECRET.

Unless Consolidation of Eastern and Western Agencies Prevails, Will be Single Agent for Each Department—Organized Opposition to Eaton and Pye

When Dr. J. W. Bashford, president of the Ohio Wesleyan University, opened the session yesterday afternoon of the Committee on Book Concern, the first thing he, as chairman, had to confront was the problem thrust upon him by the attendance of a large number of visitors. An attempt was made to declare the sessions secret, but signally failed. The delegates saw no reason to shut out the public after the Book Committee had taken the public into its confidence by publishing widely its majority and minority reports.

There is a general feeling throughout the entire conference that the only committee that should meet behind closed doors is the Committee on Episcopacy, and this because the most delicate questions of Episcopal administration and effectiveness are to be considered. Chairman Bashford appointed the subcommittees, but struck a snag in naming the subcommittee on unification of the two book concerns. He named men who were already on the Book Committee and not outside and independent men. He further named two men from one conference, the New York East, and both of them prominent anti-consolidationists, Dr. David G. Downey and Ezra B. Tuttle. The delegates refused to confirm his nomination of this all-important committee and referred the question back to him, with instructions to name one representative from each General Conference District and one at large—fifteen in all.

In the hotel lobbies a new plan was last night discussed to block consolidation and yet reduce both the expense of administration and unnecessary friction. This plan was to commit the whole subject to a commission wholly outside of the Book Committee, who should take four years to canvass this matter most thoroughly and report at the next General Conference. In the meantime the General Conference will try the experiment of but one agent for the New York concern and one for the western. The former would be Dr. George P. Mains and the latter Dr. H. C. Jennings, unless he is made bishop. This would retire Dr. Eaton in the East and S. H. Pye in the West, neither one of whom is sure of reelection this month. Against both of them there is the most pronounced and thoroughly-organized opposition. Double-headed agencies are full of friction and contrary to the spirit of the last General Conference, when double-headed secretaryships were nearly all abolished and one man chosen to be responsible for all the vast interests of his department of work. It was predicted by several prominent delegates close to Book Concern movements that this idea of single agencies for the two concerns would surely prevail if consolidation fails to carry.

WORK AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

GREAT ARM OF THE CHURCH SOLVING PROBLEM.

Beneficent Accomplishment of Drs. Thirkield and Mason in the Education of a Once Oppressed Race. Greatest of All Problems—Church Considers Problem Important.

One of the most effective of the general societies of the church, far-reaching and beneficent in its workings is the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Educational Society. Its corresponding secretaries are Wilbur P. Thirkield, D.D., and Rev. Dr. M. C. B. Mason.

As to the accomplishments of the society during the past quadrennium there is but one voice in the church. Dr. Thirkield and his associates are able to report a success that has never before been equaled. And this without the aid of field secretaries.

During the past four years there has been an increase of $84,960.72 in collections alone. Collections for all purposes during the quadrennium $465,000 beyond the record of the previous four years; annuities collected for debt, $77,096; collected and paid on debt from July 1, 1900, to March 1, 1904, $50,452.93; increase of students, 1000; receipts from tuition and room rent, increase over previous quadrennium, $23,390.54.

Through increase in collections for general fund and decrease in administrative and fixed expenses, an aggregate of $110,858 in cash appropriations for schools have been made this quadrennium more than was appropriated for the same purpose during the previous quadrennium.

Industrial work has been begun this quadrennium, and $35,400 has been appropriated in cash from the general fund for this work, and $39,095.12 has been put in permanent industrial buildings and equipment.

Something of the importance of Dr. Thirkield's work can be gained when it is known that in 1620 there were just twenty negroes in this western world. A little over two centuries later there were 4,000,000. After a generation of freedom the black population of the United States numbers 9,000,000.

The church regards the race problem as one of the gravest importance, and is endeavoring to meet the growing conditions that demand just such endeavor as is being put forth along educational lines.

For many years Dr. Thirkield has been identified with the work in the South, having twenty years ago founded the Gammon Seminary, leaving it with an equipment worth $100,000. For several years Dr. Thirkield was the general secretary of the Epworth League. When Bishop Hamilton was advanced to the Episcopacy Dr. Thirkield succeeded him as corresponding secretary of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Educational Society.

THREE BIG ONES TODAY.
VINCENT, FOWLER, MUNHALL.

The morning services today will be given over to the various churches, ministers from the conference having been appointed covering the city and all of Southern California.

This afternoon at 3 o'clock Bishop Fowler will address a meeting of men only, in Hazard's Pavilion. At the same hour Bishop Vincent will address a meeting of young people in Temple Baptist Church.

In the evening a mass meeting will be held in the Pavilion, addressed by Dr. Munhall.

"CLAP THE LID ON," ORDERS BURDETTE

REV. ROBERT J. BURDETTE is trapping for unwary Methodist bishops who may attend services in the Temple Baptist Church.

He has a dark and devious plot suggested to him by a mishap befalling Dr. Robert McIntyre a little while ago.

While the great Dr. G. Campbell Morgan was preaching at the Temple Baptist Church, Dr. McIntyre went one afternoon to hear him; but he found the church so crowded that he could not get in the front door. He craftily circled around and entered the place by a flank movement, going in a back door. He fumbled around in darkness back of the pulpit. Back of the rostrum, was a curtain he could see dimly and it occurred to him as a great scheme to go across behind the scenes and peek through the curtain at the speaker.

In the dimness, suddenly [illegible] out gracefully into space and [illegible] sprawling heap at the [illegible] 'bapistry,' crawling out with [illegible] shine and a new under[illegible] Baptist architecture.

He was rather sore, as [illegible] to Mr. Burdette, afterward.

"But," he said triumphantly, [illegible] dry. There was no water [illegible] bapistry, and I am a Methodist [illegible]

Burdette is not the man to [illegible] napping twice. The Methodists [illegible] now holding their pentecostal [illegible] in his church.

Yesterday afternoon, [illegible] hunted up the sexton and laid [illegible] structions heavily upon him:

"I want you to fill that [illegible] the brim."

"Yess'r," said the sexton, [illegible]

"Wait," said 'Bob' sternly. [illegible] a Methodist bishop falls in —"

"Yess'r," gasped the excited [illegible]

"Clap the lid on!"

THE ITALIAN BAND WARMS THE CONFERENCE HEART.

Stirring Melody Enthusiastically Received by Great Audience at Hazard's Pavilion, With Encores Demanded on Every Number. Chamber of Commerce Courtesy.

Last night Chiaffarelli and his men brought to the Wesleyans the music of the South, in all its fragrance of spice and orange, and its fever of passion.

Hazard's Pavilion had such an audience as it rarely holds. The Chamber of Commerce, with its usual lavish hospitality, had provided well as to tickets and the late comers, even in the farthest aisles, were forced to stand.

In the center of the stage were the forty-three musicians, in their quiet uniforms of cardinal-trimmed blue, waiting for their leader and the onset of the melodious fray. There were three gentle old ladies wearing foreign missionary badges seated on the platform just behind the tympani. They were hemmed in by the big drum and a pair of sturdy tuba players, yet they sat in quiet peace; they had not yet heard the Ellery Band.

The opening number was the gorgeous overture to "William Tell," most spectacular in its theatric magnificence of all Rossini's preludes, and eminently adapted to show off the brilliant throats of the Italian instruments. It is safe to say that most of those who listened were quite unprepared for what they heard. They had expected to hear a good band—doubtless a band of even unusual merit—but from such a far-away town can any great good come musically? The question was answered in the first twenty bars of the Tell overture, and as the trumpet-led storm of brazen song rushed cyclonicly to the crashing phrases of the great finale, men—and women, too—rose to their feet even from far corners of the house and led the applause with voices, handkerchiefs and hands.

The "Lucia" sextette, perhaps the very best "show piece" of the band, brought forth the greatest enthusiasm of the evening. As little Palma led the redoubtable six down the platform the veterans among the hearers started the spatting crackle along the outer skirmish line, and their signal was the keynote to attention among the rest.

The Ellery "boys" never played the sextette better than last night; Chiaffarelli, his eager eyes almost starting from his head with artistic fury, shrieked a tremendous Latin swear-word at the strenuous group beneath him, and brought down his baton upon an explosive chord of such force that the very platform seemed to rock. Thrice he did this, and his audience, bending as one individual under the spell of power, swayed backward and forward as the climax softened to that inimitable cadence of moonlight sweetness—that rich, amorous musical sentence so "Italiano," so thrilling with the piercing pain of infinite passion.

The bravos mingled freely with the rain of hand applause, and one emotional brother, seated just at the foot of the platform, tilted back and forth and shouted "Hallelujah!" with all the fervor of his time-worn voice.

There was an intermission then. When a Methodist likes you, he tells you so. As the men came solemnly tripping down the narrow stairs at the platform's right they were met by a self-appointed committee of very positive sentiments. There were laymen and clergymen, old men and young men, rich men and poor men.

And some of the women came also. Chiaffarelli, always abashed when not armed with his ivory-tipped director's wand, was nearly floored by an old lady who brought him a bunch of carnations—evidently just torn from her gown. She was very much taken with the delightful melody, and told him so, and asked him many questions as to how it was done. Now Chiaffarelli says six words in English and understands but three, and consequently his conversation was limited to vacant smiles and much confusion. The old lady went away again, wondering what was the matter with the blank-looking leader, while he, in turn, dandled the heavy white blossoms as awkwardly as a newly-made father carries his first-born.

There were two young women from the East who attacked the trombone soloist. They asked him if he liked California, and if he played every day, and if the folks in Italy were having similar weather in the month of May. While he was deciphering Ann's age, Palma, the dainty and bashful, fled into a side room. Curti was already there, smoking a cigar in a blasé manner, and with him were Donatelli and Decimo, discussing a baseball score. Ferullo, artistic Bohemian in ultissimo, had also sought this shelter.

Chiaffarelli and Ellery were the chief attractions without, and the ripple of applause started again as the conductor stepped upon the platform.

The second part of the evening was devoted to a duet of extraordinary technical difficulty and lyric beauty, played by Decimo and Ferullo; Chiaffarelli's funeral march, "Immortality," and the grand selection from "La Boheme."

If there are any better clarionetists in the United States than Decimo, Los Angeles has not heard them. The duet which he played with Ferullo last night was a bewildering maze of polyphonic intricacy and rapid intermingling of bird-like melodies [illegible] oboe was equally sure with [illegible] and the two received the [illegible] encores.

WORLD-WIDE COMMITTEE.
QUAINT REQUESTS.

That the Committee on [illegible] peculiarly a committee of the [illegible] world was demonstrated in an [illegible]esting way yesterday, when it [illegible] organization in Simpson Auditorium.

Many of the members were [illegible] but those from foreign lands [illegible] among that number. To an American there was something quaint in [illegible] requests as the following:

"I ask to be recognized as the delegate from Bengal;" "please [illegible] the name of the delegate from [illegible]pan;" "substitute for the [illegible] from North Germany," and [illegible] others of like character.

When the memorials were [illegible] was found that Central China [illegible] to form a new conference; [illegible] India, wants to divide its [illegible] society into home and foreign [illegible] and Central Asia asks for a [illegible] form of ritual for the marriage [illegible]mony.

In the appointment of the [illegible]mittees the women delegates [illegible] given two representatives on [illegible] committee of seven. Dr. J. F. [illegible]er of Baltimore is chairman [illegible] committee; Samuel Hamilton [illegible]burgh is secretary and J. E. [illegible]son and J. G. Bickerton. The actual work will begin when [illegible] sub-committees report on Tuesday.

POPULAR EXHIBIT.
CONTINUES PERFORMANCE.

A counter was operated at the [illegible] of the Missionary Exhibit [illegible] afternoon and it was found that [illegible] visitors entered between [illegible] noon and 10 o'clock last night. [illegible] estimate would place the visitors [illegible] entire day at 3000, and for the [illegible] days since it opened at 25,000 [illegible] a most remarkable showing [illegible] in charge say that it is the [illegible] record ever made. At 9 o'clock [illegible] night the crowd was so great [illegible] Bishop Joyce went to the [illegible] and delivered an address to the [illegible] delight of his hearers.

At 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon [illegible] H. C. Stuntz delivered an address [illegible] Anna Stone, a native Chinese [illegible] sang. At 4 o'clock L. S. Swe[illegible] Michigan, gave a stereopticon [illegible] on a trip around the world. [illegible] o'clock Prof. Cole delivered an [illegible] on the American Indians, [illegible] with a stereopticon. Many [illegible] were delivered by missionaries [illegible] the booths during the day.

The exhibit is a "continuous [illegible]ance," and as the figures [illegible] become immensely popular.

Rev. Dr. Robert McIntyre, the [illegible]quent pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city, will deliver [illegible]ture before the conference some [illegible]ing this week, but the day has [illegible] been determined. As Dr. McIntyre's church is not large enough to hold [illegible] crowds that go to hear him [illegible] there is certain to be an [illegible] throng at the Pavilion to [illegible] lecture.

A conference on city evangelization will be held in the German Methodist Church, opposite the Pavilion, [illegible]day evening. It will be under the [illegible]ership of J. N. Gamble of Cincinnati.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Turner of [illegible]diana delegation is being talked of by his friends for the position of [illegible]tary of the Epworth League.

Vicar Harnett's Protest.

LOS ANGELES, May 6, [illegible] the Editor of The Times:] [illegible] allow me space to animadvert [illegible] part of the address of the [illegible] the Methodist conference, as [illegible]

"Romanism does not employ [illegible] country the methods which [illegible] stamped its history with [illegible] Spain, Mexico, South America, [illegible] Rico, the Philippines, and [illegible] Yet its insidious efforts to control [illegible] secular press, its adroit influence [illegible] politics and its tireless assaults [illegible] of the chief bulwarks of the [illegible] the public school system, [illegible] sleepless vigilance of all [illegible] and patriots. Its malign [illegible] countries where it has [illegible] held unobstructed sway [illegible] its essential character and [illegible] many of the most frightful [illegible]sons which history records. [illegible] lessons we cannot close our [illegible] cause of any mawkish plea [illegible] ligious toleration. What in Romanism is morally and religiously good [illegible] not merely tolerate, but welcome; [illegible] what in it is erroneous and evil, [illegible]versive of individual rights and [illegible]tional safety, we must evermore [illegible]pose and combat.

"Mormonism, Romanism and [illegible] other isms of evil omen [illegible] work and gain numerous adherents [illegible]

If an individual had used the [illegible]guage attributed to the bishops [illegible] would not have deemed it worthy of [illegible] reply. As, however, the bishops [illegible] resent the Methodist Church, [illegible] statements, if allowed to pass unchallenged, may be considered [illegible] not well informed in such matters [illegible] true and incontrovertible. In the [illegible] sense of the right reverend [illegible] of this diocese, I deem it a duty [illegible] state to the public that the attack [illegible] the bishops on what they call [illegible]manism" is both unwarranted, in [illegible] taste, and subversive of the [illegible]

[illegible] It is unnecessary to refute [illegible] which have been refuted [illegible] of times. The people of this [illegible] as well as the unbiased and enlightened members of every [illegible] community in the land, know [illegible] that the attitude of the Catholic Church is not antagonistic to the public school system.

With regard to the "adroit influence of the Catholic Church in politics," I may be permitted to state that she attends strictly to her own affairs; with [illegible] purely political she does not [illegible]. Her pulpits afford [illegible] a refuge for preachers who itch [illegible] notoriety and whose talents are inadequate to secure for them in any [illegible] domain the publicity for which [illegible] so ardently long.

[illegible] "insidious efforts of the church [illegible] control the secular press" have existence only in the minds of those who [illegible] no effort to arrive at a knowledge of the truth. While the influence of the press cannot be gainsaid, and while it is a potent factor for good [illegible], I feel confident that the noble [illegible] who are engaged in press work [illegible] bear witness to the truth of my [illegible]. The Catholic Church is not a human organization. Her teaching is not of man's making. She does not [illegible] to apologize to the world for [illegible] the truth. She taught before the art of printing was invented, and [illegible] its aid achieved some of her [illegible] triumphs. Why, then, make [illegible] efforts to control the secular press? Sects that claim men for [illegible] founders may be sorely in need of assistance from the press, but the [illegible] founded by Christ, while giving [illegible] due meed of praise to every [illegible] that coöperates unto good, [illegible] that she is independent and does [illegible] need to cater to individuals or [illegible] their aid by "insidious efforts."

[illegible] the assertion that "Romanism [illegible] not employ in this country the [illegible] which have stamped its history with infamy in Spain, Mexico, [illegible] America, Porto Rico and the [illegible] and elsewhere," I will remark that the implied assertion might [illegible] a greater semblance of truth if [illegible] times and places than those in [illegible] were selected for giving [illegible]. The noble monuments [illegible] on the Pacific Coast seem to [illegible] heads and say to the charitable [illegible] of the Methodist Church: [illegible] you falsify! The Spanish [illegible] placed us here; we were erected [illegible] the poor Indians, not that we [illegible] to the "infamy" of those [illegible] them, but that we tell a [illegible] heroic sacrifice in the cause [illegible] and humanity. The history of [illegible] of California is the history [illegible] the lands specified as exemplifying [illegible] the "infamy" of the [illegible].

[illegible], I would advise the [illegible] bishops (so-called) to remember that Methodism is but of yesterday [illegible] that a hard task, viz., that of [illegible] to recede from their position [illegible] their advocacy of doctrines opposed to the doctrine of Christ, is before them. If they would kindly give [illegible] attention to such a trifle as [illegible] endeavor to impress upon [illegible] the importance of regarding [illegible] as something holy and indissoluble as the Catholic church always [illegible], they would be better employed than by vain and indecent attacks [illegible] in their chivalric spirit [illegible] Romanism. Mr. Editor, I am [illegible] obliged to write at such [illegible], but feel that an emphatic denial [illegible] calumnies made against the [illegible] those who ought to know [illegible] should be made. . . .

WOMEN'S CLUBS.

The Art Exhibit.

The Ruskin Art Club of Los Angeles has closed in Blanchard Hall its third annual exhibit. Public interest, especially in this city of beauty, is easily led towards anything that makes for the artistic. Many people went to see the exhibit, which was large and representative, larger and more important than any previous venture of its kind in this city. Art exhibitions in the West are apt to include many pictures that surprise and create unfavorable comment. Many of this kind are strictly in evidence in this exhibit. However, there was no want of pictures, for something over a thousand were sent in to the club. A few hundred were rejected—a few more should have been.

Every kind of picture could be seen. Flowers are painted with such profusion that one really wonders why artists will paint flowers in a country where they grow so easily and are in hand and sight every day in the year. But tourists like to take the painted flower with them when they return to eastern homes—and "there's money in it" no doubt.

Among the local artists who exhibit are Paul de Longpré, whose elegant technique is well known and whose picture, a study of roses, was honored in a Philadelphia water-color exhibit, receiving the first prize. Eugene Torrey, well and favorably known in the art life of Los Angeles, having lived here many years, comes again before the public with a number of pictures that speak eloquently of their excellent manner and subject, always taking a high place in the matter of artistic execution. Mr. Torrey having lived in Paris, where he received an art education. "The Town Crier," by this artist, was exhibited in the Paris Salon—and is representative of the French school in handling and color. Several small pictures by Mr. Torrey are gems. E. Wachtel has a number of pictures, and his work is very charming, with a poetic feeling for landscape that appeals at once to the artistic sense. His color and handling are, in many instances, replete with exquisite feeling for nature.

J. Bond Francisco is showing some excellent work. His large picture, "Sick Child," is good and realistic. There is a touch of pathos in the picture, the child's flushed fever face well portrayed and the devoted "aunt nurse," who is tenderly watching the child, could hardly be rendered more effectively. Mr. Francisco's exhibit is extremely interesting as showing his sympathy for nature, and his excellent manner of expression. Another painter whose work is at once selected as thoroughly original and delightful is Lanlewen, who gives an artistic treatment of western subjects.

Miss Duval is represented by thoroughly charming work. It is a distinct gift to be a fine copyist, and Miss Duval is to be congratulated upon this specialty as well as upon her originality. This artist's copy of a Rembrandt is one of the delights of the exhibit. There are many more artists whose work is meritorious and who should be mentioned by name, and whose work will rank with that of the best exhibitors.

There must have been a great fluttering of wings in "No Man's Land," where dwell the immortals—by name Carot, Dupré, Turner and others—if by a chance they visited the Ruskin Art Club exhibit. Imagine the thrills when they caught sight of the masters' work hung in close proximity (next door neighbor) to a clever amateur or a fledgling professional! There are many things to find fault with in the exhibit, but nothing so glaring as this intermingling. The Ruskin Art Club is not a painter's club; it is purely literary, one new in the giving of pictures to the public. Here are a few of the blunders that may be averted another year if dwelt upon at this time:

It is not mere play to promote an art exhibition in a western community, where the art life develops slowly and under tremendous "storm and stress." There will be all kinds of feeling engendered among artists and promoters. In the end all struggle of this sort pays. It is the history of all development, especially along art lines. It is a thankless effort in many instances, and the one who is brave enough to be truthful and persistent usually gets a bit of denunciation. The real friend of art must be deaf to all complaint, acknowledge mistakes and renew the fight. Life is short, but art is long. The Ruskin Art Club of Los Angeles will always be remembered as one of the clubs of California who began missionary work in a cause that has for its mission the noblest results. If it is true that all great art is inspired by surroundings, then there must be an art future of much distinction for Southern California. It was the musical master, Massenet, who said: "Were I in America, I should be exalted by the glories of your scenery, your Niagara, your prairies; I should be inspired by the western and southern life; I should be intoxicated by the beauty of your American women; national surroundings must always inspire national art."

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

Postal Service Matters.

Edward Berwick of Pacific Grove, president of the California Postal Progress League, writes at length concerning the postal service and says, in part:

"Some curious anomalies have come to light in connection with even the postal service. It has been alleged that our government pays 7.9 cents (roughly 8 cents) per pound on all mail matter for transportation alone. How then can it carry postal parcels for 2 cents, or less per pound? How exact this figure paid the railroad for transportation may be I know not. But what I do know is far more important. I know from pp. 536 and 537 of the British Postal Guide, that the British postoffice has made such arrangements with the American express companies as permits it to grant the Briton a postage-stamp rate, between New York and any point in the United States of eleven pounds for 24 cents. Just a trifle over 2 cents per pound, while the American postoffice is alleged to pay four times that for simple transport. The native American on his own soil is charged four times the rate charged the foreigner. Ten million farmers, the grange being their chief mouthpiece, demand that this condition be at least a little bettered by our government, instituting such a parcels post as other civilized nations have found one of their most beneficent institutions. This parcels post wherever established has proved itself 'an inestimable boon to all classes and an incalculable stimulus to trade;' not a voice is raised against it; it is regarded as simply indispensable. Producer and consumer are alike benefited; and, were it proposed to abolish it, the retail merchant would be the first to protest against its abolition."

A Bitter Wrong.

J. M. Greene protests against inhuman killing of food animals, and says, in part:

"In abattoirs throughout the country, and right here in your city of Los Angeles, the gentle cow and the patient ox, whom the first blow of the butcher has failed to stun, are struck blow after blow till felled into insensibility, while the timid sheep or calf, with terror in its every expression, is compelled to stand by and witness the slaughter of its fellows, knowing its own turn is to come. Such conditions are a disgrace to any civilized people. Let this business be done in such a manner as will cause the least possible suffering. There are numerous devices, any one of which will insure a comparatively painless death. The smaller animals should be given a like immunity from a cruel death by the barbarous method of throat-cutting, now commonly perpetrated on living and sentient creatures because they are small and can be easily handled. In this century, wherever 'business interests' conflict with humanity, business interests should go to the wall; but the reform I have touched upon will not handicap business interests. Limiting the attack on the creature to a single blow, followed by 'pitting' as the only sure means of causing death, and shutting out from the waiting victim the sight of the butchery of its fellows, are reforms easily accomplished, and dictated only by the most ordinary sentiments of decency."

TO THE PASTORS OF CALIFORNIA.

Pastors Study, First Baptist Church, Nacogdoches, Tex.

A. J. Holt, D.D., Pastor.

To the Pastors of California.

My Dear Brethren:

Will you allow a brother pastor to address to you some sincere and earnest words? I may not be known to all or to many of you personally, but I imagine that at least my Baptist brethren know of me.

I have been for thirty-six years a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I would be very far from lending my name or my influence to any man, or to any measure that would in the very least bring reproach upon the cause to which I have given my life, and for which I would even dare to die. I have some very decided sincere, conscientious convictions on the subject of "The New or Practical Psychology," and to the investigation of this subject, I wish to invite your earnest attention.

For many years I entertained ignorantly and unconsciously an extreme prejudice against "hypnotism, mesmerism" and all kindred psychic or occult phenomena.

Some seventeen years ago, I fell in company with Dr. W. R. Price, at the Holston Baptist Association of East Tennessee. He and myself were assigned to the same home and occupied the same room. He was a delegate to the association and I attended as the correspondent secretary of the State board of missions.

There I learned that Dr. Price was a "psychologist," a lecturer, teacher and demonstrator of the science. I stood in suspicious doubt of him the moment I ascertained this to be the case. And thereafter I observed Dr. Price very closely for several days, and he impressed me as a sane man if he was in my mind a "crank." Associations ripened into closer acquaintance and he exhibited to me such manly bearing, and testimonials from many of my well known brethren in whom I had great confidence, that I got the doctor to explain something of the principles of his specialty, which he did in an able, lucid and reasonable manner, and my interest was aroused.

During the next season Dr. Price visited Nashville, and delivered a course of lectures on "The New Psychology." I attended these lectures and each was to me a revelation. I was charmed and instructed. The demonstrations which followed the lectures were to me marvelous; and I became so interested in the science that I went myself among my fellow preachers and made up a class to take private instruction from Dr. Price.

There were ten members of the class; five were ministers, two were leading lawyers, one a college president, one an experienced life insurance agent, and one a capitalist, owner of a street railway system and coal mine. At the close of the course of lessons the class unanimously gave to Dr. Price a voluntary testimonial attesting the high appreciation which the members of the class held toward him and his instructions.

I wish to give to my brethren in the ministry an unsolicited testimony to the practical benefits I have received from Dr. Price's course of instruction. I feel that I shall help a fellow preacher into a better understanding of the blessed Bible, if I can persuade him to take Dr. Price's course of instruction. I have had the following practical benefits:

(1.) A better understanding of myself.
(2.) A better appreciation and a clearer understanding of the word of God.
(3.) A more intelligent understanding of my fellow-men, and my relations thereto.
(4.) More self control.
(5.) Better and more effective preaching power and ability.

I wish to bear testimony to the good character of my friend and brother Dr. Price. He is honest, sincere, intelligent, conscientious, logical and to the best of his knowledge eminently scriptural. Having not been, perhaps as thoroughly trained along theological lines as you may be, he may not make the fine and clear cut distinctions which a trained theologian would make. But he has grasped the spirit of the whole matter in a logical way and strives honestly to live up to the spirit of the teaching of the Bible and the Christ life.

He is a man of marvelous ability and power. Hear his lectures and witness his demonstrations and be convinced. These demonstrations he makes only to illustrate his teachings.

Now brother, let me reason with you. Do not cast this aside as "trash," a "humbug," "foolishness," etc. I at least am sincere in commending this subject of soul science to your most candid and conscientious consideration. If, after thorough examination, and an impartial honest investigation you fail to verify my statements, let me know. If Dr. Price does not prove to be an upright, honest, intelligent Christian gentleman, let me know and I will withdraw my indorsement and commendation of him.

Yours fraternally,
ADONIRAM JUDSON HOLT, D. D.

Millions who were sick—like you, perhaps—are well today because of Liquozone. The first bottle free; will you try it?

More people use Liquozone now than use medicine. Yet thousands still use drugs to cure germ troubles—to do what drugs can't do. If you are one of them, won't you let us buy a bottle of Liquozone and give it to you to try?

We Paid $100,000

For the American rights to Liquozone, because it kills germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. There is nothing else known which will do that. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Medicine cannot destroy the cause of a germ trouble.

Liquozone is so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. The reason is that germs are vegetables, and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen gas—is deadly to vegetal matter. Liquozone invariably destroys the germs of disease, wherever they are; yet to the human body it is the most helpful thing in the world.

Acts Like Oxygen

The value of Liquozone lies in the fact that it does what oxygen does. Oxygen is the nerve food, the blood food, the scavenger of the blood. It is the very source of vitality, the most essential element of life. There would be no weak nerves, no impure blood, no inside germs if we could get into the blood an excess of oxygen. But oxygen is a gas, and unstable. An excess cannot be held in the blood.

In the making of Liquozone, we get the virtues of 1,250 cubic inches of the gas into one cubic inch of liquid. The gas is derived in large part from the best oxygen producers. The process of making takes 14 days. The result is a wonderful product, stable and concentrated, holding all the virtues of the gas. It goes into the blood, to go wherever the blood goes. No germ can escape it and none can resist it. The results are inevitable.

But Liquozone is more than a germicide. Oxygen is Nature's greatest tonic, and Liquozone is a vitalizer with which no other known product can compare. It not only destroys the cause of a germ trouble, but it quickly repairs all the damage which the germs have done. It gives to every organ just the help that it needs.

Germ Diseases

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone kills the germs, wherever they are, and the results are inevitable. By destroying the cause of the trouble, it invariably ends the disease, and forever.

JAIL BREAK AT SAN BERNARDINO.

FOUR PRISONERS SUCCEED IN MAKING THEIR ESCAPE.

Heavy Stream of Artesian Water Struck Near Rabbit Springs—Boxall Will be Tried Once More—Hogs Roaming in Forest Reserve to be Shot by Rangers.

SAN BERNARDINO, May 7.—An exciting escape occurred at the County Jail just before noon today, five longtermers scaling the twelve-foot fence by means of a board taken from a rock wagon. The last man was just jumping to freedom when Judge C. L. Thomas saw them from his office in the courthouse. At the same time Deputy Constable Kahn made the discovery from a window in the Swing Block. The alarm was instantly raised, and Kahn took up the chase, confronting the jail breakers as they rushed across Fourth street. He was knocked down, and the prisoners scattered, Kahn choosing two running together to follow. He overtook them in the rear of the Foster rooming-house on Fourth street, and grabbed the taller of the two, a negro named Fred Cook, under a six months' sentence. He shed his trousers, and bounding over a board fence, escaped. Kahn then sought out the other fellow, John Ferguson, serving ninety days, capturing him in a barn, where he had sought concealment. The other prisoners escaped.

This is the second jail delivery to occur within the past three days. For the other instance one man gained liberty in the same manner as employed by today's breakers. Just where the guards have been when the deliveries occurred has not been made public.

ARTESIAN WELL.

Albert Everts and William Benson arrived today from Rabbit Springs, and report a heavy stream of artesian water to have been struck at stage station Box S, three miles above the springs. The well is being put down by the stage company on a ranch owned by George Golding. The water gushes from a six-inch pipe standing eight feet above the surface. The discovery of artesian water has caused many homestead locations to be made, and a number of cabins are being erected. There are thousands of fertile acres which will be brought under cultivation if the artesian belt proves extensive.

Interest in the Duncan mining camp, seventeen miles from Searchlight, is increasing, some very rich strikes having been made in that region within the past week. Col. Thatcher has just bought the O. K. group, located by Duncan, Perkins and Thurman, the consideration not being made public. In the region of Newberry Mountain rich placer has been found.

HELPERS WALK OUT.

The striking machinists this morning had an increase of their number by forty-two helpers and apprentices walking out. The walk-out occurred just before 8 o'clock, and was the culmination of a conference which the machinists had with them two nights ago. It is claimed by the helpers that the company had employed non-union helpers as well as machinists, and they would not stand for it. The expectation is that the boiler makers will follow next. Those who struck today were members of the allied metal trades' mechanics. They say the company discharged three men of their number Thursday without cause, and five more yesterday, and that when they went to work this morning they found forty non-union men filling their places.

BOXALL TO BE TRIED AGAIN.

The Boxall case will come up again before the Superior Court Monday, when the question of a new bond will be discussed. The District Attorney states that he will make one more effort to convict Boxall, and in event of another hung jury will ask that the charge be dismissed. Byron Waters declares that the third trial will be even more bitter than the other two, and that the defense will have evidence concerning the alleged death of Charles R. Lloyd, and if the court will admit such testimony, will spring very sensational testimony along this line.

HOGS TO BE SHOT.

Ranchers in Lytle Creek are stirred up over an order issued to the rangers to shoot all hogs found at large on the forest reserve, and this order has been carried out in several instances. The government has taken this step in order to assist the city health authorities in preventing the pollution of Lytle Creek, from which comes the domestic water supply for San Bernardino. It is stated that if campers violate the rules prohibiting the staking of horses or building outhouses within fifty feet of the stream, the government will prohibit camping in the cañon.

LOCAL NEWSLETS.

Next Tuesday the trout season opens here, and already fishing parties are starting off for the various streams. The Hook Lumber Company, having mills in the vicinity of Deep Creek, will close the mills Tuesday and Wednesday, to give the twenty employés an opportunity to fish.

Despite the strenuous denials made by the health board of Colton, Dr. M. H. Ross of the Marine Hospital Service has come up from Los Angeles to examine the youth suspected of being afflicted with leprosy, and has reported to the State Board of Health that the diagnosis of Dr. C. C. Sherman of Colton is correct, the case being the dread disease. The Colton Health Board claimed that the case was one of simple eczema.

R. P. Gahr, who has been Santa Fé assistant agent for the past eleven years, has tendered his resignation, to take effect June 1.

Capt. Gazzolo of the local militia company has been appointed aide on the brigadier-general's staff, with the rank of captain, and will resign his commission here. The vacancy will be filled by an election to be held the first week in June. The candidates so far announced are First Lieut. Allen and Private Barrows, who formerly held the rank of second lieutenant.

General Manager Denman of the San Bernardino Traction Company will leave Monday for the East, to be gone two months with his family. During his absence President Henry C. Fisher will be in charge of the local headquarters of the company.

The local lodge of Elks will leave for Redlands at noon tomorrow in a special car over the traction line, to attend the funeral of the late A. C. Clarke. The death of Clarke has left a vacancy in the board of vestrymen of the St. John's Episcopal Church here, which will be filled by appointment at the next meeting of the board.

REDLANDS.

EX-MAYOR HONORED.

REDLANDS May 7.—The public mass meeting held last evening to extend to ex-Mayor William Fowler the appreciation of the citizens of Redlands for the many years of public service he has rendered the city, was very largely attended. Addresses were made by Mayor J. J. Suess, C. L. Hayes, E. S. Foote, J. G. Glover and Prof. L. B. Avery. Mr. Fowler was presented with an office chair and desk and a large easy chair.

PLANS FOR NEW SCHOOL.

The trustees of the Lugonia School district, comprising the north half of the city, have adopted the plans presented by Architect F. S. Allen of Pasadena for a new school building to be erected at the corner of Colton avenue and Texas street this summer. The contract will be let at once.

The new McKinley school building has been completed and will be opened for use at once and will relieve the crowded condition of the present buildings. Thursday evening the people of the city are invited to inspect the new structure. The cost was about $40,000.

RIVERSIDE.

BANK MERGER READY.

RIVERSIDE, May 7.—Receiver J. W. Wilson of the Orange Growers' National Bank has returned from Fresno, and everything is in readiness for the Citizens' Bank people to take hold. Those having money in the Orange Growers' Bank must present their claims inside of three months or they will have to be taken up in detail with the government. Receiver Wilson will have charge nominally of the bank for about ten days after the merger.

HERE AND THERE.

Taylor and Tharp, charged with robbing a Chinaman of $21, were bound over to the Superior Court under bonds of $1000 each.

The members of the Victoria Club are planning a bowling tournament soon for men and women.

Sunny Lodge, K. of P., will observe Sunday as Memorial Day, holding services in the hall at 2:30. M. Estudillo will deliver the oration.

A rousing celebration is promised by Co. M for Riverside July Fourth. The celebration will be held in Fairmount Park. One feature will be the presence of several companies of militia.

ANAHEIM, May 7.—The California Citrus Union has closed its packing-house here for this season and will pack the remainder of its output from the Citrus Union packing-house in Fullerton. It will have several carloads of late fruit to move out. The Savanna school district will hold an election this month to decide whether or not to issue bonds to the amount of $1800 for the purpose of erecting and furnishing a new school building.

SANTA ANA.

WITNESSES SO IGNORANT.

SANTA ANA, May 7.—The preliminary examination of Premitivo Otero, charged with the murder of Moreno, a fellow-worker at an El Toro sheep camp last Sunday night, was commenced in Justice Smithwick's court this morning, and continued all day with unsatisfactory results. Of the fifteen Mexicans placed on the stand, all of whom were working at the camp and slept within a few feet of the scene of the tragedy, not one would acknowledge hearing of it, and persistent questioning failed to reveal anything but the studied ignorance of the witnesses. Otero claims self-defense, and will probably succeed in establishing his story.

REPUBLICANS ACTIVE.

The new Republican Central Committee started its active campaign work today with a meeting at new headquarters, No. 308½ East Fourth street, to discuss the situation and make preliminary plans. About Famous Men.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt has a great reputation for his humor. Years ago he received an enthusiastic letter from his intimate friend Millais, the artist, who boasted of having killed a great stag. Sir William replied: "I received your insane letter, from which I gather that you are under the impression that you have killed a stag. Poor fellow! I pity your delusion. I hope the time is now come when I can break to you the painful truth. Your wife, who (as I have always told you) alone makes it possible for you to exist, observing how the disappointment of your repeated failures was telling on your health and on your intellect, arranged with the keepers for placing in a proper position a wooden stag. You were conducted unsuspectingly to the spot and fired at the dummy! In the excitement of the moment you were carried off by the gillie, so that you did not discern the cheat."

Herbert Spencer in his newly published autobiography says of Prof. Huxley: "He was one of a circle in which tragedy was the topic, when my name came up in connection with some opinion or other; whereupon he remarked: 'Oh, Spencer's idea of a tragedy is a deduction killed by a fact.' On another occasion George Henry Lewes gave Huxley an opportunity. I had invited some half-dozen leading men to meet an American friend at dinner. In the course of the evening a conversation arose about habits of composition. Lewes, one of the last, said: 'I never hesitate. I get up steam at once. In short, I boil at low temperatures.' 'But,' remarked Huxley, 'that implies a vacuum in the upper regions.'"

In superintending his household affairs Herbert Spencer was practical and amusing. At one time the poulterer had not been giving satisfaction, so Spencer called his housekeeper and gave her directions to transfer his custom to another tradesman, whose shop faced the delinquent's. "And, Miss Smith," said the author of "Synthetic Philosophy," "be particular that the first poulterer sees you giving your orders to the second poulterer."—[Chicago News.

OVERWHELMING SUCCESS.
RAMA'S CLAIMS SUSTAINED.

All Doubt Dispelled—Almost Miraculous Results Obtained in the Cure of Chronic Diseases by the Rama System of Treatment.

The Unrivaled Success of this Great Master of Medicine and Surgery Has Attracted the Attention of the Entire Population of Los Angeles and the Pacific Coast.

Diseases of the Eye

Dr. Rama will give sight to those that were born blind. He will restore sight to those who are totally blind. He will implant glass eyes that have every movement of a natural eye. He will make artificial pupils through which the patient can read the finest print.

His method of removing cataracts and Pterygiums, straightening cross-eyes and all other surgical diseases of the eye are his own and unknown to the average specialist. All errors of refraction, such as far-sightedness, near-sightedness, astigmatism and double vision accurately corrected.

Rama offers a treatment that is not experimental, but one that has proved wonderfully successful. He offers treatment based upon the latest scientific and medicinal authorities of this country and Europe, combined with the Oriental practice of medicine and art healing. He does not resort to the methods of floating quacks and itinerant vendors of bottled herbs and roots, who are commonly classed as fakirs.

Dr. Rama's Credentials

The doctor presents the following credentials: Graduate Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia; graduate of the Post-Graduate Hospital of New York; graduate Charring Cross Hospital, London, Eng.; member of Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of London; Associate Physician of the Frauen Klinik, Berlin; Assistant Physician Prof. Fusch's Eye Klinik, Vienna, Austria; member of the Oriental Society of Yogis, Bombay, India.

Diseases of Men

If you have been unsuccessfully treated or buncoed by so-called specialists who treat men only, then try a physician who has mastered the entire field of medicine, and it will prove to you that a doctor has to know every disease to treat any one class with success

Special Announcement

All consultations, X-ray examinations, microscopical and chemical examinations of the blood, sputa and urine, with expert diagnosis, given free of charge.

Delays are Dangerous

Many diseases are so deceptive that hundreds of persons have them before they ever suspect it. They know they are not well, but are perfectly ignorant of the deadly fangs which are fastening upon them, and must sooner or later destroy them unless rescued by a skillful hand. Are you afflicted?

Your case may now be perfectly curable, but remember every moment of neglect brings you nearer its incurable stages, where perhaps the most skillful physician can render you no assistance. The present is ours. The future may be TOO LATE.

Diseases of Women

Such as have baffled the skill of all other physicians and remedies, Rama quickly cures. Cancers, tumors, fibroid and polypoid growths cured without the use of the knife. No cutting, no pain, no danger.

Epilepsy or fits scientifically treated and cured by a never failing method.

RAMA'S SPECIFIC MEDICINES go straight to the diseased organs and can be plainly felt at work in the diseased parts very shortly after their use is begun. They are pleasant to take, mild but searching in action, yet agree with the most delicate lady or child, do not reduce the strength, and can be used while at the usual occupation, as many patients still able for hard work and close attention to business are often slowly, surely, yet unconsciously dying, knowing themselves to be ill, yet, deceived into a false security, they procrastinate and put off the matter until the case is incurable.

Call and be examined, and at least learn the cause of your disease, and if it can be cured. If you can't call, write.

TOO NERVOUS FOR HEARING.

O'TOOLE OF PASADENA TAKEN TO SANATORIUM.

Said to Have Been Slightly Disfigured Also in the Little Unpleasantness Friday Night—Interesting Pasadena Day at Shakespeare Club—Early Settlers Take Part.

PASADENA, Office of The Times, No. 25 South Raymond avenue, May 7.—Edward O'Toole, the young society man arrested Friday night for assaulting his rich wife several years his senior, was arraigned yesterday afternoon, but the hearing was continued owing to the physical condition of the defendant. Last night O'Toole was taken to the sanatorium at Sierra Madre by Constable Newell, having developed violent nervous symptoms.

O'Toole declines to discuss the case, but makes the statement that he had but recently recovered from an attack of typhoid which may have rendered him a little "irresponsible." His coachman, Robert Curry, parted company with him Friday night. It appears the trouble bordered on a free-for-all, in which the wife did not sustain all the damage. When she appeared at the station anxious for a reconciliation her face bore evidences of the encounter, but it is said by those who have seen O'Toole that he is just a little disfigured. The case was continued for one week.

PASADENA DAY.

Every year the women of the Shakespeare Club devote one afternoon to the consideration of the beautiful city in which they live, and this was such a day. From every point of consideration, the afternoon was of great interest, happily combining the present with a hint of the future, with the not-distant past, when Pasadena was founded. Mrs. [illegible] Chapin, who has for several years been intensely interested in the improvement and beauty of the city, gave the opening paper, upon "Pasadena, Her Defects and Her Virtues." After recounting the many and especially good features possessed and acquired, Mrs. Chapin described in a vigorous way some of the pronounced defects and results of mistakes. Among the latter she named the narrow streets in the business center, the long lines of unsightly poles, the lack of unison in the city shade trees, if [illegible] any; in short, the evident lack of any comprehensive plan for a city in the early years. Until recently one great lack of the city in very many ways was parks. This has been [illegible], but every city needs one large park at some point near the center as a playground. To fill this need, Mrs. Chapin [illegible] by the city of Arroyo [illegible] its great possibilities. [illegible] of parks was considered [illegible] to the City [illegible] with the arroyo on [illegible] Knoll on the southeast, [illegible] on the northeast, and [illegible] Park on the northwest, [illegible] by well-constructed [illegible]. Pasadena has no great [illegible] has Los Angeles in her [illegible] roads, Riverside in her [illegible], Redlands with her [illegible], and Santa Barbara [illegible] Montecito drive." In a [illegible] street improvement of the [illegible] the city, Mrs. Chapin [illegible] Pasadena had done more in [illegible] than had been accomplished by any other city in the country. The ever-present real estate [illegible] billboards were deplored, and [illegible] glimpses of the city given [illegible] by Mrs. Chapin, [illegible] no such defects in the Pasadena of the coming years. The sentiment of what should go to make [illegible] city, combined with Mrs. [illegible] interest in the whole [illegible] made her paper of unusual [illegible] to all.

"[illegible] Settlers" had the remainder of [illegible], Mrs. R. E. Burnham [illegible] in charge, and fascinating stories of the early days, the [illegible] of conditions thirty years ago, [illegible] comparatively few members [illegible] "Indiana Colony" builded the [illegible] of Pasadena far better than [illegible]. In the audience were a [illegible] of the old settlers, and their [illegible] recognition as some old story [illegible] was full of interesting as [illegible] itself.

[illegible] introduced as the "mother [illegible] Pasadena," Mrs. H. E. Elliott, [illegible] of one of the first men of [illegible]. Mrs. Elliott read a clever little [illegible] written in 1876 for the literary [illegible] conducted by the bright men [illegible] of that day. It was "An [illegible] Original Pasadenans," and [illegible] by a couple of verses [illegible]. Dr. H. A. Reid, the author of the only history of Pasadena, then read a humorous bit [illegible] which the sharp contrast [illegible] (Pasadena) and Devil's [illegible] cleverly brought out.

[illegible] then told in a very entertaining [illegible] of the first days of the [illegible] way back in '74, when [illegible] was made. Of the first [illegible] first church, the first literary [illegible] and the first poem, Mrs. [illegible] in a happy fashion, which [illegible] the audience. That first [illegible] dealt with the church-going [illegible] of the dogs of the colony [illegible] than interesting. Seymour's pup was given special [illegible] from old letters were [illegible] extracts from the paper [illegible] by the literary society of [illegible] years. Stories of the old [illegible] line to Los Angeles, of [illegible] road, and of the wonder [illegible] mule line to Linda [illegible] told about by Mrs. [illegible] own fascinating way. Mrs. [illegible] followed with many [illegible] first days in the beautiful [illegible] which Pasadena is now the [illegible]. Her first impressions [illegible] ago were clear and vivid [illegible] her first glimpse of the [illegible] verdure and beauty of this [illegible] extracts from that little [illegible] "The Pasadena Reservoir," [illegible] by Mrs. Conger, her copy [illegible] of which she was the [illegible] and printer.

[illegible] Newkirk closed the [illegible] afternoon with a charming [illegible] Pasadena, entitled, "A Sunset," [illegible] which he described the wonders to be seen from the [illegible] in or near here. Among [illegible] visitors were Mr. and [illegible] Burnham, recently from [illegible] Mr. Rosenbaum, Mrs. [illegible] was the first school teacher [illegible] and Whit. Elliott, brother [illegible] Elliott Bandini. As [illegible] beginning of things of [illegible] Fred Burnham and Whit [illegible] small boys together, and [illegible] today to hear reviewed [illegible] was a great pleasure to [illegible].

[illegible] five of his Italian [illegible] by Mr. and Mrs. W. [illegible] entertain the guests at the elaborately appointed Bohemian supper given at their home on Madeline Drive Friday evening, and in their honor the Italian colors, red, white and green, were used in the decorations of the rooms. Mrs. Williams read "Aux Italiens" and several other selections, and other guests sang and played during the evening. Old brass jugs and tankards from Holland held red roses and white blossoms and formed appropriate center pieces on the tables, the supper served being part Dutch and part Italian, with all the Bohemian flavor possible. Gay ballet girls disported themselves upon the place cards for the men, while those for the ladies were decorated with orchestra men and Bohemian musicians. Upon one of the long tables at which the guests were seated, crimson candles were used, while on the other green ones further accentuated the Italian colors. The guests, about thirty, included Los Angeles and Pasadena friends.

SAWTELLE.

STORY OF A BAD BOY.

SAWTELLE, May 7.—Yesterday Charles Black, who was recently arrested under the Juvenile Court act and detained at the Detention Home, was released on promise of his father to send him north to the home of a relative, who should properly care for him. For some time Charles has been a neglected child, and has been allowed not only to perpetrate considerable mischief himself about the community, but has been known to induce other boys to do likewise. Another boy who is now in the Detention Home on petition of his parents was induced to run away from home by Charles, so the parents aver.

VETERAN DIES AT "ATTENTION."

FINAL SUMMONS AT MOMENT OF INSPECTION.

Moses Rawles at Soldiers' Home Says "I am Ready" as Officers Enter Barrack and Falls Dead—Visitors from East Find Long-separated Friends.

SOLDIERS' HOME, May 7.—Literally "faithful unto death" Moses Rawles a member of Co. F, answered the final summons here today.

The veterans were in readiness for inspection in quarters. Up the broad avenue toward barrack F came the correctly uniformed officers.

"They are coming" was the cry of a lookout, and a moment later the command "members to quarters" was heard. Rawles arose and passed to his ward.

"I'm all ready for inspection" the blue-coated veteran said as he reached his bedside.

But it was a higher summons than that of officers in the Uniform of Uncle Sam that Rawles was to answer. Just as Inspector-General Knox and Gov. LaGrange entered the barrack the aged hero of the sixties who had declared he was ready fell dead.

Rawles served two terms in Co. A, Fourth California Infantry and was admitted from Ventura in 1893. Two brothers William E. and Brum Rawles are also members of the Home. Both are absent on furloughs, one in Oakland, and the other in Wimar, Or. Rawles was 62.

The order for inspection in quarters this morning, by Inspector-General Knox, was supplemented by the order to not leave barracks until inspection was concluded. Orders of this nature are always regarded as irksome, as it usually lasts all day, and deprives the veterans of their usual walks and visits for the day. Today they were delightfully disappointed, however, as Gen. Knox, accompanied by Gov. LaGrange and staff started at the unusually early hour, 8 o'clock a.m., and by noon had completed the circuit of barracks.

AFTER MANY YEARS.

The various conventions in Los Angeles contribute many visitors to the Home. And many unexpected acquaintances are thereby renewed. Among the visitors of this week was Richard W. Jackson, of Providence, R. I., for thirty-five years connected with the Mutual Life Insurance Company. Jackson was a lieutenant in Hawkins's Zouaves, Ninth New York Infantry. Happening in the quartermasters's office at headquarters here, he encountered Col. Abner P. Webster, who during the war was captain in the same regiment. They had not previously met since the war.

Among visitors from the Master Plumbers' convention just ended in Los Angeles, was J. B. Butterworth, accompanied by Mrs. Butterworth and daughter and Miss Smith of San Francisco, acquaintances of Capt. J. Howard Young, whom they had not met for a number of years.

DEATH OF CAPT. SANDS.

Word is just received here of the death of Capt. Henry Ralph Sands, late adjutant of the Third Wisconsin Infantry, on January 12 last, at Danville, Ill. Sands was a native of Ireland, and of aristocratic lineage. His father was captain in the Scots Guards, Third Regiment, Household troops. His uncle, Sir Charles Coote, was colonel in the Queen's Royal Rifles during the Crimean War, and young Sands was given a commission in his uncle's command. At the end of the Crimean War he came to Milwaukee, read law, and was a partner of Judge E. G. Ryan of that place, until the Civil War interrupted his career, and ill health succeeded. Sands was for several years an efficient clerk in the treasurer's office here.

ENSIGN TO PREACH.

Rev. J. E. Ensign of Buffalo, N. Y., one of the Methodist divines attending the General Conference in Los Angeles, will preach for Chaplain Beck at 10:15 a.m. tomorrow. Gen. Knox of New York will review the soldiers at 9 a.m. Religious services will follow the review.

GLENDALE.

WOULD INVITE METHODISTS.

GLENDALE, May 7.—The Glendale Improvement Association has appointed a committee to request the electric railway company to give the delegates to the Methodist General Conference in Los Angeles a trolley ride through this valley.

The girls' basket-ball team of the Glendale High School, composed of Misses Lucile Pittman, Lucy Bittanier, Blanche Davenport, Alta Stone and Helen Bary, will play a game with the Los Angeles High School team Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock, on the Los Angeles High School grounds.

ALHAMBRA.

PASTOR AND BRIDE WELCOMED.

ALHAMBRA, May 7.—Rev. B. V. Bazata, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and his bride, née Miss Minnie H. Bailey, who have just returned from a three weeks' wedding tour in the northern part of the State, were given a reception this afternoon by the parents of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bailey, from 3 until 6 o'clock. The affair was one of the most notable of the kind that has ever occurred in Alhambra, the number of friends who called to pay their respects being exceedingly large. The house was nicely decorated and the arrangements for the reception acceptable in all respects. Rev. and Mrs. Bazata will reside for the present at Mr. Bailey's and the former will occupy his pulpit again tomorrow.

FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

A special meeting of the Alhambra Board of Trade has been called for Thursday evening next, to consider the matter of road and street improvement. The question of oiling public thoroughfares is one of the principal subjects to be discussed, and for that reason O. F. Longden, chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and a well-known authority on oiled roads, has consented to appear before the board. Other interested citizens will make explanatory addresses on the subject.

BRIEF MENTION.

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss of Philadelphia, who stands near the head of the class of senior bishops of the Methodist Church, and who delivered the address to the conference Thursday morning, is the father of Mrs. A. C. Weeks of Alhambra, and will make the family a visit later.

There are 400 children of school age in the Alhambra school district at the present time. This is a gain of seventy over last year, which is good evidence of our increase in population.

Notices for street work on Main street and the first notices of the kind for this city, have been ordered published and posted. Which shows also that street improvement will now commence in earnest.

The candidacy of N. W. Thompson for the Republican nomination of Assemblyman from this district is being cordially received. Mr. Thompson is Mayor of the city, and a member of Title Insurance and Trust Company of Los Angeles.

SAN PEDRO.

BANKS CONSOLIDATE.

SAN PEDRO, May 7.—The Bank of San Pedro and the Citizens' Savings Bank have been consolidated. The contract has been let to add a third story to the Bank of San Pedro building, the proposed improvements to cost $6500. The annual meeting of the directors and stockholders of the Bank of San Pedro was held this week. The report shows a declared dividend of $10,000, being $20 on each share of stock. The sum of $1200 was passed to the surplus fund for the year, making a net earning of $11,200 on the capital stock of $50,000. The old board of directors was retained, with Henry Baly as cashier.

Herman Silver and Charles R. Densmore, State Bank Examiners, were here yesterday for the purpose of examining the books of the Citizens' Savings Bank.

NEWS DRIFTWOOD.

The outfall sewer and lateral district sewer No. 1 have been completed and were accepted today by City Engineer Foster, and house connections can now be made.

The Pacific Electric is distributing ties and rails along Pine avenue today prepartory to laying a double track on the main thoroughfore of the city. This work is being done in advance of any contemplated local service, because the contract has been let for asphalting the street, and the council desires to avoid a tearing up of the street in the near future.

Arrangements have been completed for a great musical festival at Long Beach June 30, July 1 and 2. A chorus of children's voices will be given one evening, a woman's chorus the second day, a symphony orchestra with several prominent soloists the last afternoon and on the closing night a chorus of 300 voices will render an oratorio yet to be selected.

The High School orchestra and mixed glee club gave an enjoyable concert at the Tabernacle tonight, the programme being under the direction of Paul Jennison of Los Angeles.

HOLLYWOOD.

HIGHWAYS ILLUMINATED.

HOLLYWOOD, May 7.—Incandescent street lights are being installed along the boulevard and side streets, and one circuit of about fifty lamps was first lighted Sunday evening. The preliminary expense of canvassing and installing experimental switches, and a large share of cost of this first circuit is borne by H. J. Whitley privately. Property holders are subscribing for the maintenance of lights in front of their holdings, and, as the cost is only about 40 or 50 cents per lot per month, it is expected that soon all of Hollywood will be illuminated.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Potts, one of the delegates to the Methodist General Conference, and editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate, will preach at the Hollywood Memorial Methodist Church Sunday morning. Rev. Stephen Duncan of Louisiana will preach at the same place in the evening. Rev. Dr. J. G. Evans of Chicago will preach at the Christian Church in the evening.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

For sickly girls and women who suffer from Monthly Irregularities, Backache, Cramps, Sick Headache, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia or Constipated Bowels there is no medicine will give relief so quickly as the Bitters. The weakest stomach can retain it. Therefore we urge a trial at once.

CATALINA ISLAND.

SLAUGHTERING SHARKS.

AVALON, May 7.—A new source of entertainment has been opened up for the amusement of island visitors. Thursday night the bay was discovered to be full of sharks, and A. H. Scott conceived the idea of fishing by the light of a lantern. The scheme worked and the sharks immediately got busy with his bait. So busy was he that he called for help, and W. M. Nichols, R. E. Jones, D. D. McDonald and H. L. Curtis joined in the fray, and for nearly two hours they had furious fun. There were sharks of every size and kind, and when they had tired themselves out they counted up fifty-three, ranging in size from two to six feet in length and embracing hammerheads, shovel-nosed, horned, leopard and many others. One was a strange-looking affair, with wings, and they called it an angel fish.

Schools of barracuda ran in at Seal Rocks this morning and the fishers in that vicinity were in luck. C. H. Harding and son, Fred, with Tad Gray, took ten barracuda, two yellowtail and a bonita.

Rev. Charles F. Murphy and Mr. Smith, from Long Beach, with the Mascot, Capt. Gemelere, took seven barracuda, a bonita and a strange form between a shark and a ray, with some of the features of a squid.

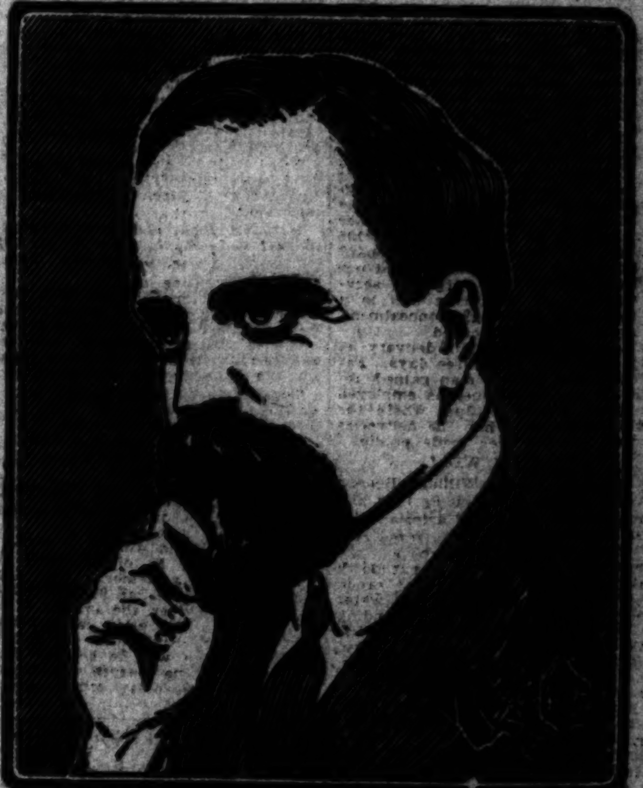
Send No Money, Simply Send Your Name and Address and I Will Send You Free Enough of My Vital Life Fluid, the Most Marvelous Compound Ever Discovered, to Convince You of Its Mysterious Unfailing Power.



DR. C. S. FERRIS.

He Has Discovered the "Secret of Life," for He Cures All Diseases with His Marvelous Vital Life Fluid.

I have discovered the marvelous secret of life, and with it I can make you well, no matter what your sickness. I can make you strong and well, no matter how weak or crippled you are. With my Vital Life Fluid, the secret of which is known only to me, I cure nearly every known ailment of the human flesh. I believe there is no ill or ailment under the sun which my marvelous Vital Life Fluid will not banish, for it has time and again restored to the perfect bloom of health a host of poor and unfortunate sufferers.

I do not seek to demonstrate a theory. I have no time for that, for I am accomplishing facts. I am curing thousands who had given up all hope of life, I am bringing joy and happiness into hundreds of homes. If you suffer from kidney and liver disease, lung and stomach or heart trouble, consumption, constipation, rheumatism, neuralgia, blood and skin diseases, catarrh, bronchitis, paralysis, diabetes, lost vitality, and ailments, eczema or salt rheum, headache, backache, nervousness, fever, coughs, colds, asthma, or any disease or weakness of the vital organs, come unto me and I will cure you and make you well. The wicked may scoff and cry "fake," but the people whom I have snatched from the very jaws of death are living witnesses to the everlasting power of my matchless Vital Life Fluid, and I rest the whole proof of my power and the truth of my claims on them. Believe them and ye will believe me. To me and my marvelous remedy all systems and all diseases seem alike. It matters not how hopeless and helpless you may be; it matters not what doctors have said or what remedies have failed to cure you; it matters not whether you have faith, my Vital Life Fluid is life itself and will banish all disease. I have brought thousands back to life and health, and have been paid for I will send to every sufferer some of my precious Vital Life Fluid absolutely free. This is my duty, and it will perform its miraculous cures right before your own eyes. Write and tell me what you wish to be cured of, and I will cure you. I will send you the marvelous Vital Life Fluid that will make you as strong and healthy as if disease had never touched you. Write me today. Never mind the scoffings of your friends. Your life may be at stake and you not know it. They cannot cure you, but I can save you and I will if you will only let me. My private address is Dr. C. S. Ferris, 1345 Strewn Building, Cleveland, Ohio, and I personally assure every person who writes me, be they rich or poor, a prompt and courteous answer and enough of my precious Vital Life Fluid free to convince them that I have truly discovered the secret of long life and perfect health.

MEN!

Weak, Puny Men; men who want to be strong, vigorous, youthful and ambitious, who want to feel like Men. I will cure you and you can

Pay When Cured

Let any man who is weak, broken down, old and decrepit in physical weakness, full of pains and aches, gloomy, despondent and cheerless—any man who wants to be stronger and younger than he feels—let him come and tell me how he feels, and if I say that I can cure him and he will show that he is honest and sincere he need not pay me a cent until I cure him.

I don't want money that I don't earn. I don't need it and am not after it. But I am after the dollars that are now going wrong in quest of health. Look at all these poor wrecks of humanity that are spending all they earn on drugs—dope that is paralyzing their vital organs—that have spent all they have earned for years without gaining a pound of strength for the hundreds of dollars wasted.

That is the money that I am after, because for every dollar I take I can give a thousand per cent interest. And I don't want it at all until I have cured you if you will secure me. I have cured so many cases right here that I can prove my claims to you, but if that proof is not enough I'll cure you first and then you can pay me. Is that fair?

Most of the belts that I am selling now are to men who have been sent here by their friends, whom I have cured. I think that is the best evidence that my business is a success from the standpoint of cures as well as on the dollar side.

Just lately I have received letters of praise from these men: James P. Davis, 709 Devisadero st., San Francisco. He was cured of a back trouble of 12 years' standing. G. W. Scott, Madison, Yolo Co., Cal., an old man of 75, who feels like a young buster of 20 since he has been using my belt. J. M. Gaskill, 220 Chestnut ave., Santa Cruz, Cal., who says I cured him of Indigestion, Constipation, Nervousness and Lumbago from which he had suffered 15 years.

Wherever you are, I think I can give you the name of a man in your town that I have cured. Just send me your address and let me try. This is my twenty-fourth year in the business of pumping new vim into worn-out humanity, and I've got cures in nearly every town on the map.

Come and see me if you can, and I'll fix you up, and you can pay me afterwards, or if you can't call write to me and I'll do the same thing. I've got a nice book on men that I'll send sealed free, if you inclose this ad.

NEWS AND BUSINESS.

Postoffice Notes.

Johnson, then secretary of the Cumulative Credit Company, prohibiting him from using the mails, has been revoked by the department, on the understanding that he has severed connections with the fraudulent get-rich-quick concern. BREVITIES.

—Special millinery announcement. Miss E. C. Collins, the Broadway milliner, 249 S. Broadway, Byrne Bldg., will make a special display on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday next. On this occasion Miss Collins will show a direct importation of Parisian models and a large number of Fifth avenue designs in tailored hats, toques and dress hats. These hats are selected and designed especially for Miss Collins, and embrace the very latest ideas possessed by the most renowned Parisian and New York designers. Miss Collins will also display an immense line of medium-priced toques, small hats and dress hats. These are distinctly "Collins Hats," and possess that elegance of material, and refinement in design and trimming, which has made the name of Collins famous in millinery circles in every part of the country. Tourists and ladies in Los Angeles who are careful and correct in dress no longer rely on eastern centers for stylish hats. It is now generally recognized that the "Collins Hat" embraces everything possessed by the latest Paris and New York creations. Patrons need not be reminded that from the medium-priced street hat and toque to the finest imported patterns, Miss Collins's prices are not more than two-thirds of those of eastern houses.

—It is now a matter of no little comment among keen observers in the realty line that Highland Park is coming to the front rapidly; this is as it should be, because it is natural. The great rivalry that formerly existed between St. Paul and Minneapolis was the means of the two great cities growing toward each other instead of otherwise, so today the jealousy between Pasadena and our own city will result, as evidenced by the improvements in Raymond Park, South Pasadena, Garvanza and Highland Park, in making every available foot of ground in these parts rise greatly in value; the point is, buy now and get the increment value that is sure to follow. Investigate our offers. Prudential Improvement Company, 101 N. Broadway.

Hardwood floors versus carpets. For a limited time only the price will be reduced to $1.25 per square yard. Every housewife (also builders and contractors) should take advantage of this offer. They can be laid in old houses as well or better than in new ones. Ladies, do away with dust and disease germs, moth, etc., which you must have with ordinary carpets. Polished hardwood floors are cleanly and healthful. Material and workmanship unsurpassed. Smith's Floor Works, 425 West Seventh steet. 'Phone Main 2868, Home 6838. Est. 12 years.

Special millinery sale. Extensive repairs in the store at 309 South Broadway, occupied by the Gertrude Millinery, require the immediate sale at whatever sacrifice necessary, of the entire trimmed hat stock. Every grade of hats, from the trimmed street hat to the most elegant Parisian pattern, is represented in this sale at just half price. Gertrude Millinery, 309 So. Broadway.

HUNDRED OF THEM HERE.

Early Arrival of Engineers' Brotherhood Men.

Preparations for Busy Days in Week to Come.

Some of the Leaders of the Great Fraternity.

Beginning this week, the Methodist General Conference will not hold the undivided attention of the people of Los Angeles. Added to the thousands of people attracted hitherward by the conference will be several thousand more who are coming here on account of the Sixth Biennial Convention of the Grand International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

The session of the engineers will open in Turner Hall next Wednesday, and continue for one month or more. The convention will consist of 646 delegates, representing practically every State and Territory of the Union, as well as Mexico and Canada. Most of the delegates will be accompanied by their wives or members of their families, thus making a total of 2500 or 3000 visitors. The Ladies' Auxiliary of the brotherhood will meet at the same time in Blanchard Hall, there being upwards of 200 delegates to this body.

The delegates began to dribble in last Friday, when twenty or thirty arrived. About one hundred came yesterday. More will come today, and by Wednesday, it is expected, the entire body will be here. The grand officers will arrive tomorrow. Local committees will meet the dignitaries of the order and most of the delegates at the depots and escort them to their hotels. Many of the visitors have friends or relatives here who will entertain them during their stay.

The deliberations of the convention, which are of interest chiefly to members of the order, will be secret, but a public session will be held in the Mason Operahouse Wednesday afternoon, at which addresses of welcome will be delivered and responses made. Mayor Snyder and representatives of the business interests of Los Angeles and the railways centering here will extend the formal welcome to the delegates; responses will be made by grand officers of the brotherhood.

While there will be daily business sessions of the convention extending over a period of one month, the delegates will devote much time to pleasure and sight-seeing. The local Committee of Arrangements, of which Eli Sevens is chairman and C. E. Martin secretary, has planned many side trips for the visitors and arranged other forms of entertainment that will give them a surfeit of pleasure.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers had its beginning at Detroit, Mich., in 1863, when twelve men met and formed an organization that now includes in its membership nearly every working locomotive engineer on the American continent. Unlike most labor organizations it has not had for its chief object the fomentation of strikes and boycotts, and, with the exception of a few stormy periods when bad counsel prevailed, it has acted in accord with the employers and kept on the side of law and order.

To the late P. M. Arthur, more than any other one individual, is due the credit for making the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers a model among labor organizations. Mr. Arthur became a member of the order in the early years of its existence, took an active interest in its welfare from the beginning, and was soon selected as one of its grand officers. The Panhandle strike of 1874, which was denounced as an act of folly by the then Grand Chief, Charles Wilson, and brought the brotherhood into disrepute, resulted in a called session at Cleveland, O., February 25, 1874, at which Mr. Arthur was chosen as Grand Chief Engineer. He immediately began a vigorous campaign to regain the confidence of the members and the public, and eventually succeeded. From that time on he held the position of Grand Chief Engineer continuously until the time of his death, last July, while speaking at a banquet of engineers in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

"Defense not defiance" was one of Chief Arthur's mottoes for the government of the order. He tried to impress upon the engineers that they did not own the railroads and the rolling stock and that the golden rule was a very good thing to keep in mind when dealing with employers. He never lost an opportunity to exert his moral influence, constantly admonishing the members to live sober, upright lives. In his last public address he said: "What greater crime can there be than for a man to run a train when his mind is under the influence of liquor? Do not forget the generosity of your employer, but demonstrate your appreciation by closer application to duty." This was his characteristic advice, and of late years the engineers have lived up to it to such an extent that trouble between them and their employers has become a thing almost unknown.

The late lamented Chief Engineer was almost idolized by the members of the brotherhood. His wise counsel will be missed at the coming session, but it is believed that his spirit will still continue to rule the proceedings. A. B. Youngson, the Assistant Grand Chief, upon whom the mantle of Chief Arthur descended, was also removed by death, almost simultaneously. At a special election held last August, J. C. Currie of Jersey City, the Second Grand Assistant Chief Engineer, was unanimously chosen to fill out the unexpired term of Grand Chief, but he declined the honor. The position was next tendered to W. S. Stone, who accepted it and will preside over the coming convention.

Many of the delegates who have been attending the biennial conventions and are acquainted with the head men of the brotherhood, think Mr. Currie best fitted to fill the position left vacant by the death of Mr. Arthur, and if he can be prevailed upon to accept the responsibilities of the place it is probable that he will be again elected to be Grand Chief Engineer.

SOUGHT THE FORAKER GEMS.

Porch-climber Nabbed at the Hotel Lillie.

Saw Ladies' Diamonds Upon Their Dresser.

Landlord Held Him up With Gun—Queer Excuse.

A thief skulking in the porches of the Hotel Lillie after a set of diamonds worn by Senator Foraker's niece, who is a tourist here, fell into the hands of a plucky hotel man with a gun last Thursday night.

The Hotel Lillie fronts on Central Park, and many wealthy people spend the season there—rich picking for thieves.

Among the guests this winter have been Mrs. James Foraker and Miss Ethel Marie Foraker of Cincinnati, the latter being the niece of the Ohio Senator, and a very attractive young woman.

Thursday night as the two ladies were dressing for dinner, they were alarmed to see a strange man skulking about the upper veranda in front of their room and trying to peer in. They were terribly frightened, and snatching up their jewels, rushed from the room.

In the hall they met Guy K. Woodward, the proprietor of the house. Mr. Woodward used to be a deputy sheriff, and is a man of personal daring.

Grabbing up a gun, Woodward ran upstairs as fast as he could, and met the man trying to escape from the porch through the hall. Woodward held him up and nearly scared the fellow to death.

"What are you doing here?" he demanded.

The porch climber protested that he was merely looking over the house to see if he would like to take a room there; but Woodward had no faith in tourist who take the method of climbing the porches and peeking in the windows to look over the rooms to see if they suit. He made the fellow hold up his hands, and turn his pockets inside out.

Nothing in them. Not even a return ticket.

He had no diamonds or anything else to speak of.

Afterward, the fellow was taken to the Police Station, but he could not be held, because he hadn't had a chance to do anything criminal.

The ladies were horrified at the idea of getting into the papers, and Mr. Woodward—well, he would laugh and decline to be made the hero of a Buffalo Bill scene.

THE BAREFOOT MAN.

Two more burglaries were placed yesterday to the credit of the barefoot burglar, who is going through the southwestern part of the city.

Yesterday Walter R. Wright of No. 1034 East Twenty-seventh street reported that a burglar entered his house by a bedroom early yesterday morning, presumably about 1 o'clock. He took a gold watch and $5. R. S. Brown, living two blocks from there, at No. 931 East Twenty-seventh street, reported that at about 2 o'clock the fellow struck his house, entering in the same manner and taking a gold watch.

TO LEAGUE CLUBS.

Secretary Felton Taylor of Oakland Requests Names of Delegates to State League Convention.

Secretary Felton Taylor of the State League of Republican Clubs of California has mailed to league representatives throughout the State the official call for the Fourth Biennial Convention of the league, to be held in Sacramento May 16, in advance of the Republican State Convention to elect delegates to the national convention. This call impresses upon Republicans the need for representation at the league convention, and all clubs within the party are invited to send delegates. The following important provisions are contained in the call:

"The apportionment of delegates is as follows: Each Republican club in California shall be entitled to one delegate-at-large, one delegate for each twenty-five members upon the rolls, and its president, secretary and treasurer, ex-officio. Other ex-officio members are all officers of the National League in California, officers of the State and Congressional leagues and the president of the American College League of California. Alternates should be chosen for each delegate, and they will be accorded seats in the convention with their respective delegations."

"All delegates shall file with the secretary of the convention certificates of election signed by the president and secretary of their clubs.

"Such certificates should be sent to the secretary, Felton Taylor, Oakland, on or before May 10, 1904, or to him at Sacramento between May 10 and the time of the opening of the convention.

"Arrangements for reduced rates will undoubtedly be made with the transportation companies, and certificates for that purpose can be secured from the ticket agents when purchasing tickets."

Names of delegates and alternates should be forwarded at once by the clubs in the Seventh Congress District, through the regularly-accredited league officers, to Secretary Taylor at Oakland for use in making up the roll of the forthcoming convention.

CAMINO REAL.

Executive Committee Maps Out Work. Many County Representatives Named.

The Executive Committee of the Camino Real Association held its first meeting Friday afternoon at the office of President A. P. Flemming. The several committees which were elected contain names which guarantee the success of the large undertaking of the association. It was shown that the work of forming local clubs in the important cities throughout the State is progressing rapidly. There are eleven members of the eighteen on the committee present, the out-of-town workers being Rufus P. Jennings of San Francisco, Judge J. T. Richards of Santa Barbara and Frank Ey of Santa Ana.

Eight vice-presidents were elected, as follows: Walter R. Bacon, Joseph R. Knowland, Mme. C. M. Severance, David Starr Jordan, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Joseph H. Johnson, Benjamin Ide Wheeler, Mrs. John F. Swift and the Rt. Rev. Archbishop George Montgomery.

Vice-presidents of the eight Congress districts were appointed as follows: H. B. Gillis, Ureka, Siskiyou county; Marshall Diggs, Yuba City, Sutter county; A. H. Morse, Vallejo; Marsden Manson and Mrs. George Law Smith, San Francisco; Paul Shoup, San José; J. E. Starbuck, Salinas, Monterey county; J. M. Guinn, Los Angeles, and Senator C. S. Smith, Bakersfield, Kern county.

President Flemming appointed fifty-seven county representatives of the Executive Committee, one from each county, those from Southern California being, N. T. Ent, San Luis Obispo; W. W. Broughton, Santa Barbara; E. L. McCloud, Bakersfield, Kern county; Cora B. Sifford, Ventura; Dr. O. S. Barnum, Los Angeles; Mrs. Victor Montgomery, Santa Ana, Orange county, and George W. Marston, San Diego, County, representatives from Riverside and San Bernardino are still to be appointed.

Walter K. Bacon, Senator Ben Hahn and Oscar Mueller were appointed as the Legislative Committee and will at once investigate the road laws of California and make a report.

A committee consisting of Joseph R. Knowland, R. P. Jennings, Charles F. Lummis, Gail Borden and George Arnott was chosen to plan the organization of local clubs.

The Press Committee consists of Mrs. A. S. C. Forbes, President Flemming and the secretary, Mrs. C. R. Olney. Mrs. Olney was also empowered to assist in the formation of local clubs.

CARNATIONS AND ORANGES.

The women of the University Methodist Church had charge of the decorations and refreshment booth at Hazard's Pavilion yesterday. They used 6000 red and white carnations in the decorations, 3000 of which were donated by the Ocean Park Floral Company. Miss Della Bates had charge of a bevy of a dozen ladies from the University Church, who served lemonade and oranges all day to the visitors. Twenty-five boxes of choice navels and 165 gallons of lemonade were used, this being the contribution of the Chamber of Commerce.

BEGAN IN BREAKERS.

Romance Ends in Prospects of Smooth Sailing.

Coming Wedding of Cinderella of Santa Monica.

Emma Newkirk Captured Beauty Prize.

A few days ago the San Francisco papers announced the engagement of Miss Emma Newkirk to Edward Willis.

Miss Newkirk is the pretty Santa Monica girl who went to New York not long ago and walked away with the $1000 physical beauty prize.

Mr. Willis is the young prospector who quite recently became a very wealthy man through his fortunate discoveries in the gold fields of the Klondyke. He will meet Miss Newkirk at St. Louis in June and then the romance commenced in the surf at Santa Monica several years ago will find consummation. Their future home will be made in Dawson City, where a charming house is being prepared for them.

The beautiful Emma Newkirk is the daughter of William Newkirk, laborer, whose home is in Santa Monica. She is a Native Daughter of the Golden West, and spent all of the earlier days of her life here by the sea, where sunshine such as only California knows made her the envy of thousands and the cynosure of all eyes. Some months ago she went to New York, and being sweet of face and fair of form, she was in demand as a model, and posed for classic studies for some of the most eminent artists. By one of them she was told of the prize of $1000 offered for a perfect female figure. She entered the contest against the beauties of the East, the North and the South—and won. In truth, there was only one rival who approached her at all, and to that competitor fell second prize.

By a popular vote last December Miss Newkirk was acknowledged to be the most beautifully-formed woman in America. Her measurements, it was developed in the contest, coincided precisely with those of the Venus de Milo. The popular vote dethroned the former "American Venus," Miss Clara Bert, and placed the crown upon the brow of Santa Monica's daughter. Miss Bert lost because, the critics said, the great toe of her right foot lacked just one thirty-second of an inch of attaining the classic length. Miss Newkirk, on the other hand, lacked nothing whatever of perfection. Conforming in every particular to the canons of health and beauty, Miss Newkirk's figure won for her over all competitors the $1000 prize for a perfect womanly figure at the physical culture exhibition, Madison Square Garden, New York.

Willis, the prospective bridegroom, it develops, is the young fellow who, a few years ago, met Miss Newkirk here under romantic circumstances, and fell in love with her. The beautiful Emma was an expert swimmer—as she was at all out-of-door sports—and one August day while in the surf went farther out beyond the breakers than she had intended. Battling to get back, her strength became exhausted and she fainted, and would no doubt have been drowned but for the prompt assistance that reached her. Willis it was whose strong arm kept her head above water and brought her ashore. The acquaintance then formed ripened into love, and the announcement just made of the celebration of the nuptials in June tells the rest.

EVENTS IN SOCIETY.

A MAY party, an old English May party, but such a one as old England never saw in all her merry days, for the wealth of bud and blossom, the bursting bloom of the outdoors, the fragrance of rose and the perfume of every sweet May flower of sunny California, graced the beautiful al fresco affair given by the four little Gradys to a hundred of the small buds and beaus of Los Angeles yesterday afternoon at the residence of their parents, Dr. and Mrs. James B. Grady, No. 935 West Twenty-eighth street.

With faces as bright as the dewiest rose of them all, the little maids, Geraldine and four-year-old Gwendolyn, received the guests, gowned as May queens, with crowns of pink and white roses, and dainty airy gowns of rosy hue veiled in white. John and Dawson Grady assisted.

The lawn about the Grady home was soon filled with many small lads and lassies like so many flitting butterflies, and in honor of the day each little maid wore a wreath of flowers and each boy wore a conspicuous buttonhole bouquet. And there were as many kinds of wreaths as there are flowers in the land; roses and poppies, and sweet peas, and pansies, and dear marguerites, and even the blue cornflowers, crowned the pretty heads, while a magnificent May-pole, with particolored ribbons of green and pink and white was wound with the pleating ribbons as the children danced in and out, in and out, tripping the merriest measures, to the strains of old English music, played by the De Nubila Orchestra, hidden away under a convenient date palm.

Many English games were played; there was "London Bridge Is Falling Down," "Ring Around a Rosy," "Nuts and May," and that quaint old play,

"Oranges and lemons, Say the bells of St. Clemons."

Then came the sack races for the boys, and the costermonger races, such as the sweeps have in London on a May Day. This was followed by the grand march with the "four little Gradys" in the lead, holding aloft tall English May sticks with designs of harps and other instruments, done in bright roses. They led the happy procession to the verandas around the house, where the tables were spread and decked with graceful baskets filled with snowy May tassels, or with beautiful nodding roses, while on the cloth were feathery ferns and waxy rose petals strewn at random.

The children's eyes brightened at the many quaint things set before them, the queen cakes, for instance, iced in white and covered with bright-colored comfits; old-fashioned gingerbread, and many modern dainties and delights that the old-fashioned people did not have.

The favors were the most charming of May baskets tied in green ribbon and filled with toothsome sweets, while the many prizes that the children had won in the games were dainty bits of Dresden china for the girls, and knives and other treasures for the boys.

In the spacious dining-room, decorated in roses and with rose-veiled shades for the lights, the mothers were served, for a goodly number of mothers had accompanied their little people.

At Old People's Home.

On Friday afternoon Miss Ellen Beach Yaw, assisted by Miss Blanche Rogers, Mr. Meade and Herbert Ritchie, entertained the family of the Hollenbeck Old People's Home, giving them a feast of music long to be remembered. The listeners will cherish, not alone the memory of Miss Yaw's wonderful voice, but love her always for her generous kindness and the sweet and unassuming manner in which she bestows her favors. The closing number, "Home, Sweet Home," touched all hearts, and many eyes were dim, as the last sweet notes fell upon the air. The large dining hall was appropriately decorated with masses of California poppies and rare ferns. Mrs. Hollenbeck presented Miss Yaw with a large bouquet of magnificent Ulrich Brunner roses.

For Miss Hunt.

Mrs. John H. Norton of No. 834 West Twenty-eighth street entertained on Friday at luncheon in honor of Mrs. Sumner P. Hunt, retiring president of the Ebell Club. The guests were the nine ladies who are the most closely connected with the late president, who soon leaves for St. Louis. The house was decorated by Mrs. Norton, who is always novel and artistic in her ideas, assisted by her niece, Miss St. John. All over the house yellow and white, which are the colors of the Ebell Club, prevailed. In the dining-room yellow and white marguerites were used in profusion on the walls, and over the table was a bell of the bright and glowing flowers, with an "E" made on each side of white sweet peas. The bell, which hung low, was reflected in a mirror in the center of the table, and from the bell ribbons were strung to each place, where were corsage bouquets of coreopsis tied with yellow tulle bows. All the menu as far as possible was carried out in the prevailing colors, the ices being in the form of yellow bells inscribed with white E's. After luncheon a guessing contest was indulged in, and Mrs. A. L. Danskin won the prize, a fetching picture of a girl in a golden poppy hat. Covers were laid for Mrs. Sumner P. Hunt, Mrs. A. L. Danskin, Mrs. Frank King, Mrs. Charles Flint, Mrs. A. A. Knight, Mrs. Charles Prager, Mrs. Edgar L. Swain, Mrs. I. W. [illegible], Mrs. M. L. Moore and Mrs. John H. Norton.

The living-room contained great clusters of Cecil Bruner roses, arranged in artistic profusion. Yellow roses were in baskets about the music room, and the piano was banked with the blossoms. Progressive games were played, and prizes were awarded Miss L. Neeb and Clem L. Glass. A linen shower for the bride-to-be was a surprise, and the feature of the evening. Guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. STATUS OF THE NEGRO.

"The Supreme Court of the United States is against us. We have good friends in this country, but they are comparatively few, and the only thing left for us to do is to leave. Let us be men. Let us go where we can be men. The negro is here. Some declare that he is here to stay, but I doubt it very much, unless he is to stay underground." Thus discouragingly spoke Bishop H. M. Turner of Atlanta, Ga., addressing the African Methodist Episcopal Conference in Chicago on Friday evening. He expressed the opinion that this country "is not the negro's home," but that, on the contrary, "God has allowed the negro to come to this country to be enslaved in order that he could be trained and go back to his native land and make it what it should be."

This is an extreme view of the negro question. It is not to be wondered at that some intelligent negroes take a pessimistic view of this question, which concerns them so vitally. The treatment which the negro has received in the United States, taking all things into consideration, has not been such, it must be confessed, as to inspire in his heart a very optimistic view of the future. Brought here a slave, against his will; held in bondage for a long period of years; released from bondage and given nominally the rights of citizenship, only to have the draught of freedom with equal rights dashed from his lips almost before he had tasted its blessings; discriminated against and regarded with contempt by a large proportion of his white brothers (for all men are brothers)—is it any wonder that the negro, in this land dedicated to freedom and the rights of man, often gets discouraged and ready to cry, with Bishop Turner, "this country is not my home." The fact that a majority of educated negroes do not take so gloomy a view of the situation is proof that they belong to a naturally cheerful and optimistic race, inclined to look on the bright side of things and to make the best of untoward conditions. That they have such cause for discouragement is hardly to be denied.

On the same day that Bishop Turner of Atlanta, Ga., was giving voice to his disheartenment in Chicago, the twenty-second quadrennial session of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Conference was in session in St. Louis, Mo. Addressing this conference, Rt. Rev. Alexander Walters of Jersey City, N. J., took a rather hopeful view of the situation. After heartily indorsing the President as "a fearless and able patriot, who believes in equal opportunity for all citizens of the United States, regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," he said:

"The negro has suffered considerably through the adverse decisions handed down by the Supreme Court. The negro is making substantial progress along material, educational and moral lines despite the adverse legislation of some of the Southern States. We as a race are still being discriminated against and suffer inhuman treatment, and public sentiment seems to be growing against us, both in the North and South. But we are in the right, and we know that God is on our side, and we shall eventually prevail."

This is a more optimistic summing up of the situation, and it is nearer the truth than the view expressed by Bishop Turner. The cause of the negro in this country is not by any means hopeless, however much it may seem so at times to those suffering under the smart of injustice. So long as there are men like Theodore Roosevelt to recognize the justice of the negro's cause and to champion his rights as a citizen, there is good ground for the hope and belief that his cause will eventually win full and fair recognition at the hands of the American people. The people mean to be just. They may permit injustice to prevail for a time, but they will not forever permit any great wrong to go unrighted. It will no doubt take a long time to eradicate the prejudice against the negro which unfortunately exists in the minds of some people, but even this will be accomplished in the fullness of time; for it is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and is opposed to the genius of our government.

It is quite true, as Rev. Walters declared, that "the negro is making substantial progress along material, educational and moral lines, despite the adverse legislation of some of the Southern States." The salvation of the negro depends upon his continuance in the way of progress along these lines. It is his only chance, and by improving it to the utmost he will demonstrate incontestably his worthiness to have and to enjoy unchallenged the citizenship rights which are now in part denied him. Booker T. Washington and other leaders among the colored men are pointing out the way, and it is in large part through their teachings that the colored man "is making substantial progress along material, educational and moral lines."

To a very large extent, the colored man must be the architect of his own ultimate destiny. It is not to be denied that he is at present working under a serious handicap; but his triumph will be all the greater if he succeeds; and he will succeed if he possesses the courage and the patience to move steadily forward in the path of progress.

It would be awful if it should some time be charged against the Looloos that they have lately been taking gate receipts under false pretenses.

PRESIDENCY NOT FOR SALE.

A dispatch from Lafayette, Ind., relates that Daniel W. Simms, a candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, has "caused a political sensation by declaring that he had been promised the nomination and a $25,000 campaign fund if he would successfully manage Hearst's campaign in Indiana," and that he has declined the offer.

It is not stated whether the sensation was caused by the declination of Mr. Simms or by the offer made to him, with its large contingent fee, or "campaign fund." Politicians are not given to declining such liberal offers, as a general proposition; but it is apparent that in this particular case, however good the $25,000 contribution may have looked to Mr. Simms, he did not consider himself equal to the task of "successfully" managing a Hearst campaign in Indiana. The task would certainly be an imposing one if by a successful campaign is meant the swinging of Indiana into line for Hearst in the Democratic National Convention, which is obviously the meaning intended.

Perhaps it may be as well to remark, at this stage of the proceedings, that the Presidency of the United States is not for sale. It is not a thing to be bartered for dollars and cents, although William Randolph Hearst appears to imagine that he can buy it if he puts up money enough. The entire campaign of the Hearst individual is based upon the assumption that money expended "where it will do the most good"—which in this case means the most harm—will suffice to place him in the highest office within the gift of the people. His campaign must of necessity be based upon this idea, for it has no basis in any public demand for his candidacy, in any special qualification for the office (for he possesses none,) nor in any special strength which he could bring to the ticket, if nominated; for the only strength he could bring to his ticket would be that of his open "barrel."

To be elected President of the United States is the highest civic honor that can come to any man. To regard this exalted office as something to be bought or sold is a belittled and belittling conception of its dignity and worth. No man who could entertain so warped and unworthy an idea of the Presidency would be fit for the office, though he were otherwise qualified for its duties by experience, intellectual attainment, and moral character—three qualifications in which the Hearst individual is conspicuously deficient.

When William Randolph Hearst is through with his presumptuous, ridiculous and futile campaign for the Presidential nomination, he will be a great deal poorer in purse and considerably richer in experience than he was when he began operations. The one truth which will be thrust upon him more forcibly than all others, whether he heed it or not, is the fact that unmitigated "gall," backed by unlimited millions, will not suffice to place in the office of President a man who is utterly unfit for the position.

If the time should ever come when the Presidency of the United States can be bought by any brainless millionaire who is willing to pay a price for it, the beginning of the end of our free republic will be at hand.

The Presidency of the United States is not for sale at the present time.

WHAT WILL THE PEOPLE SAY?

May 18, at Sacramento, the delegates who represent the Republican electors of the State of California will meet to choose delegates who will represent the party in this State at the national convention, which assembles at Chicago in June. Among these delegates to Chicago will be four delegates-at-large, who will be elected by the whole body of delegates at Sacramento.

This State convention stands for the whole body of California Republicans. The intention is that they shall meet with unprejudiced minds and select for this high honor from among all the Republican electors of the State four men who shall as near as can be represent all the Republicans of the State, and who therefore shall not only be fairly representative of the party, but acceptable to the members of the party at large.

But it looks as if this intention was in a fair way to be frustrated. Rumors float down here on the spring trade winds which blow from the northwest that the convention at Sacramento might as well not assemble at all. It seems that their functions have been already performed in advance, and that the four delegates-at-large have been chosen weeks before the meeting of the convention charged with the performance of this duty in a manner acceptable to the party at large. It need hardly be said that the "slate" made is not of the making of the whole body of delegates, and that it is not at all acceptable to the Republican electors of the State of California. This "slate" is for the most part the work of men who will not be in the convention, in many cases of men who could not get into the convention. Indeed, it is more than probable that some who have had a hand, a strong hand, in making this "slate" are not Republicans at all, but rank Democrats. In fact, a small clique of ringsters in politics has elected itself to dominate the action of the State convention; to usurp the rights of the State delegates, and to frustrate the will of the Republican electors of the State. It is a high-handed and impudent proceeding, and ought to be severely rebuked by the convention when it meets.

Who are these men who send out word from the Oregon border to San Diego and order the delegates into line to send their creatures to Chicago? What will the delegates legally selected to represent the Republican party of the State do about this brazen invasion of their rights? Will they, like meek cattle under the yoke, or like sheep consigned to the slaughter, march obediently to the orders of the "bosses" and register the will of these corrupt political intermeddlers, instead of standing like free men worthy of the trust reposed in them by the party at large and registering the will of the whole party whom they represent? We shall see.

Strange to say, at the head of this slate stands the name of the Chief Executive of the State. Dr. George C. Pardee owes his dignity as Governor of California to that element in the Republican party which spewed the ringster gang in politics out of their mouths, broke the ringster slate in pieces, and defied boss rule in the party. At the tail of the list stands our own would-be boss in politics, J. W. McKinley, who does "such politics" as he is able to swing, and that is little enough, at the behest of a notorious Democrat in the Southern Pacific corporation, and of any boss influence he can gather to work with him. The said "jedge" has bitterly and futilely enough opposed Dr. Pardee in politics when Dan Burns and his gang were striving with all their might to fasten boss rule on the party in this State.

Well, there you are, as matters stand at date. The programme is as impudent as it could well be. The matter must now go to the convention when it meets in Sacramento. The true, unselfish Republicans of California will wait with interest, if not anxiety, to see if their delegates sent to represent them will be true to their trust, or if they will fall down before the boss influence and do the bidding of the bosses, who debase politics and lessen the chances of party success when the pinch comes at the polls. There the influence of the boss comes to zero power, and often an indignant public registers its will in a kick so vigorous that the pain and disability are felt for a long time.

We will see what we will see.

THE SITUATION AT RIVERSIDE.

So, "Tom" Hays is for the present a free man, barring his obligation to the surety company which stands pledgee to the State in the sum of $30,000 for the indicted bank cashier's appearance when he is wanted to face the charges pending against him in the court. This partial release of the man charged with wrecking the Orange Growers' Bank of Riverside seems timed exactly so that he may again "do politics" in Riverside, where his skillful hand is badly needed. Tuesday the county convention of Riverside is to meet, and Hays's backers—for there are still men in Riverside so lost to all political shame, patriotism and sense of decency that they stand with him—boast that "Tom" will be on the floor of the convention, and things will be done there at his behest and on his orders alone. Hays is not a member of the convention. By all proper political ethics he should not be permitted to hold a proxy. But they do things in Riverside politics in a way that ethics do not apply to. Hays is out on bail, charged with falsifying the records of a bank of which he was cashier, and whose doors are closed forever. He is again charged with a felony, and would be again "behind the bars" but for the easy-going way in which justice, as well as politics, is managed at Riverside. There will be men in the Riverside County Convention who will be forced to take the hand that falsified the records of the bank, and which some are convinced plundered the cash box of the bank. These creatures will take his hand and take his orders and do his will in the convention. It will be a very interesting study in Riverside politics to see how many will thus debase themselves. It will be a shameful spectacle.

There are some matters to come before the Republicans in Riverside which concern the whole State. A Senator is to be nominated, and an Assemblyman. The Senator represents Orange as well as Riverside county. Hays's "influence" in the past has spread over into Orange, and some of his creatures are there still. When the rank and file of the party is counted in both counties, Hays's creatures are a miserable, though pestiferous, minority. It is only by the indifference of the great body of Republican electors that these corruptionists have any power to do evil. Unfortunately, it is when it is too late that the mass of the people awake to a sense of danger, after caucuses and nominating conventions have done their worst to jeopardize party success by putting up improper or incompetent men. Then there is only one thing to do—elect the Democrat if he be a half decent fellow, and let the party interests suffer.

"Forewarned is forearmed"—this is a trite saying, but a very true one. The Republicans of Riverside have this advantage. They know "Tom" Hays. They know the gang that he works through and with. They know to their sorrow the results of this influence in politics at Riverside. There are intelligent and honest men in the mass. Will they develop sufficient party pride and civic pride to do their duty, or will they let things go to the dogs in their politics? A good place to test the strength of the honest people as against the gang is to gather around Senator Caldwell, a clean, experienced, capable man who should be sent back to Sacramento. In this fight the best Republicans of Orange county can well afford to join the good people of Riverside. Mr. Caldwell is particularly well informed on the subject of irrigation, and he would be for a clean, honorable man for United States Senator. These are the most important matters likely to come before the Legislature. With the State Senator they might bunch the Assemblyman. Miguel Estudillo seems to be in all respects a man of high character and good ability. Let the many honest Republicans in the two counties make the fight here, but not here alone. Let them carry it into everything that comes before them, and show the country that they cannot be longer dominated by a corrupt gang of ringster politicians and by known felons. Whatever excuse there may have existed for indifference to the men who have done politics in Riverside, there is no excuse now.

National conventions such as have met at Los Angeles, in the last few years, are quite as enlightening in their way as world's fairs. We have made the acquaintance of many famous educators and have discovered that, for all our jesting, the women's clubs do excellent work of different sorts; now, as a crowning lesson, we are learning how time has liberalized the churches through the spirit of brotherhood that is broadening all our humanity; and we are able to perceive how much nearer the different denominations have come to one another in the modern spirit.

The memorial to the late President McKinley presented before the General Conference yesterday by Rev. J. W. E. Bowen, colored delegate from Chattanooga, Tenn., was a noble tribute to one of the noblest Methodists who ever lived. Politics and religion are not often found in intimate association, but President McKinley proved that a man may win success in political life and still be a consistent Christian.

The heavyweights among our Methodist brethren do not look with serenity upon the proposition to go back to the short-term pastorate limit. It is not so easy for them to itinerate as it is for the lighter men.

No wonder Simms of Indiana shied at Hearst's offer of $25,000 if he would "successfully" manage the Hearst campaign in that State. That qualifying word would frighten almost any level-headed man.

It will be a happy day for the local street contractors if the charter revisers lead them out of the wilderness into which the Vrooman Act and consequent court decisions have plunged them.

One swallow does not make a spring, nor do one or two defeats at the beginning of a war mean ultimate defeat. Our Union army had its Bull Run, but it was victorious in the end.

A member of the State Democratic Committee in Texas recently shot two men on the same day. The campaign appears to be opening somewhat ahead of time in Texas.

Apparently the only feature of Admiral Togo's latest "corking" of Port Arthur was the prevalence of a gale during the familiar bottling process. Otherwise the report conforms to precedent.

Young Griffith should not be blamed for aspiring to be an elevator boy. Every thoroughbred American youngster has an ambition to rise in the world.

Now that the nomination of Folk for Governor of Missouri seems inevitable, there is a mighty sharpening of knives in St. Louis and Kansas City.

The small boy has reason to be happy. The shingle manufacturers, in convention assembled, have resolved to curtail the product of their mills.

Some of the Methodist brethren came pretty near two-stepping when Ellery's Italians tuned up for them last night.

An official notice posted in the Des Moines, Iowa, postoffice says that hereafter preference will be given to clerks who are married, and particularly to those with large families. This race suicide must stop.

Tom Hays can console himself with the reflection that he never found out how strong his "pull" really was till he had got into jail.

The Methodists have bottled up Los Angeles and taken the whole works along the San Gabriel.

Still, Tom Hays is not yet out of the woods—by several counts.

If your Fido didn't get a blue ribbon, it's a doggone shame.

NEW SERVICE TESTS.

At the civil-service test held yesterday afternoon Capt. Charles Kiener introduced two new features—one each for the fire and police departments. Prospective patrolmen were obliged to take a first run of 350 yards, come to a sharp halt before the examiner, and answer rapidly a number of questions, and then immediately handle a dummy weighing 150 pounds. This was to demonstrate reserve breath. Fire applicants were given the run and a quick ladder climb with the dummy.

The President's Unpopularity.

President Roosevelt does not seem to be able to please anybody, except a great majority of the American people. His case is a hard one. How in the world he can keep right on, content with the mere able, honest and courageous conduct of his office, is a mystery which some persons will never be able to clear up.

He is a menace to "business." His presence in the White House has upset financial confidence games and jeoparded the schemes of the buccaneers of the commercial world.

He has presumed to question the "inalienable right" of politicians and placemen to rob the public. By doing this he has materially limited the liberty of sundry thrifty gentlemen, and has "attacked the honor of the legislative branch of the government."

Have soggy combinations of watered capital collapsed? They fell through fear of Roosevelt.

Have "good fellows" gone to the penitentiary, or have Congressmen been suddenly disclosed in the act of playing pranks with the Decalogue? Roosevelt did it.

Only the other day the Kentucky Legislature enacted a law prohibiting co-education of white and negro children at any school in the State. This means the crippling, if not the abolition, of Berea College. The bill was passed with that intention. Who is responsible? Narrow-souled and cramped Blue Grass lawm at all. Roosevelt did it. SANTA CATALINA.

"The enchanted isle in a summer sea."

Once, when shone the gypsy star low in the Summer sky,
Wandering with the gulls to sea, we went, my heart and I;
With winds of morn and afternoon we sailed till sunset's glow,
And the red star, the gypsy star, hung o'er us warm and low.

The red star, the gypsy star, it lured us till our sail
Was folded, like the sea-gulls' wings, beneath the moonlight pale;
Then care was cast to windward and peace was on our lee,
And Santa Catalina, like a dream, rose from the sea.

Behind us fell the running tides, the tides that stretched away
Beyond the gleam of Hesperus, to Ind and far Cathay;
Before us sank the Golden Coast kissed by the sobbing waves,
The Golden Land where poppies crept above the Padres' graves.

But, Golden Land and teeming Ind, and tides, and ships, and all,
We caught no haunting cry of them nor heard their voices call—
Naught but the whisper of the breeze uplifted from the deep,
From the white, swept seas of wonder where the giant Tunas leap.

O heart, do you remember, do you remember still
That night of mystic glory when we climbed the moonlit hill?
When Santa Catalina in a flood of splendor shone,
And the fairy lights had faded from sleeping Avalon?

And, oh, do you remember the dream-wrapt hours we lay
With the shimmered seas around us and the world so far away?
Just you and I together, and the water's tender croon,
And the hills of Catalina 'neath the mellowed Summer moon.

Moon and sheen of starlight, they passed—'twas long ago—
But in the hollow of God's hand we slept yon night, I know;
The ghosts of care and wild regret, unseeing, wandered by
The isle of Catalina, where dreamed my heart and I.

PUBLIC SERVICE—OFFICIAL DOINGS.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The Fire Commission yesterday morning appointed a committee to investigate the causes leading to the wreck of engine No. 4 Friday night.

The Charter Revision Committee will consider a street-improvement amendment to the city charter which will obviate the necessity of Vrooman Act work.

Notices were yesterday sent to all departments of the city government that municipal collections must be deposited with the City Treasurer as soon as they are received; monthly settlements will not be accepted.

The Foster estate is to come up tomorrow for distribution. The curious point involved is that the two minor children are unmentioned in the will, and are unrepresented in claiming their share of over $20,000.

Mrs. Fannie Holliday, who made a sensational fight in the courts a few years ago, has filed suit to renew the judgment she then obtained against her brother and sister-in-law.

AT THE CITY HALL.

MUST NOT HOLD BACK FEES.

RPOMPT DEPOSIT OF COLLECTIONS MADE MANDATORY.

City Auditor Insists That Moneys Collected in All Departments Must be Deposited Daily With the City Treasurer—Monthly Settlements Will Not be Tolerated.

A tidal wave of municipal reform has occasioned the issuance of daily report forms to the heads of all departments of the city government, together with a polite request to "Bring all that is paid to thee by day

At night to the Treasurer."

Article 68, Section 6, of the City Charter provides that "No city officer shall retain any fees, recompense or compensation received by him for the discharge of any duty of his office from any person other than the city, but shall immediately pay over to the Treasurer of the city all such sums of money received."

Precedent has construed the word "immediately" to mean every once in a while. The custom of some departments has been to make weekly deposits with the Treasurer; others make monthly deposits, and a few are said to delay occasional deposits even longer than that.

The appearance of these blank deposit sheets has given rise to the rumor that one or more departments had become so remiss in the matter of turning in collections as to overstep the bounds of business propriety, and that the sending out of these blanks was a gentle reminder to come up and settle. This, however, City Auditor Bostwick yesterday denied. "Those daily deposit blanks are being issued by this office in conformity with the provisions of the city charter." He said: "To the City Auditor is intrusted the supervision of all accounts and collections. This office prepares a daily balance sheet. That cannot be made out properly if the money collected in the different departments that day has not been paid in. Some of the heads of departments make monthly settlements of fees collected. Others deposit oftener. A few make daily deposits."

Asked whether some departments did not occasionally hold money longer than thirty days, Mr. Schwaebe said that in a few instances the money collected the first of one month would not be paid in until the 10th of the next month, but none of the departments were farther in arrears than that.

"By retaining money until the first of the next month," explained Mr. Bostwick, "the heads of departments keep in their possession funds that the city might be using during the same time to a good advantage. In some departments fees are collected by men who are not under bond. There are instances where the head of a department is not bonded. This is a matter in which custom has established a precedent of monthly settlements. That is not in accordance with the charter and strict business methods require its discontinuance." It affects all offices in the City Hall, the Board of Health and the water department. I have asked the City Attorney for an opinion as to whether it also affects the police department. The charter provides for the immediate deposit of all money collected in that department, but there is a clause in the State law with which the charter may possibly come in conflict."

"Money collected by every department should be deposited with the City Treasurer at once," said Mayor Snyder. "That is what the charter says. If custom has established any other kind of precedent, then custom should abolish it. Those deposits should be made for the protection of the heads of departments themselves. The Treasurer is bonded to care for the city's money; the heads of departments are not called upon to share his responsibility."

TO INVESTIGATE WRECK.
COMMISSION MISCELLANY.

Investigation was yesterday morning ordered by the Fire Commission of the causes that led to the wrecking of fire causes that led to the wrecking of Chaves and Main streets Friday night while on the way to respond to an alarm of fire.

Capt. Eley reported to the commission that J. J. Del Valle and Martin Dunn of the engine crew were seriously injured, that one horse was killed instantly and another so severely hurt that it had to be shot, and that the engine was badly damaged. He said that the wreck was occasioned by the engine's coming in contact with the rails of the car track, which was more than a foot above the surface of the street. The captain said that Main street was being graded, that the contractors had left it in a practically impassable condition, and that no lights were placed there to warn travelers. Commissioners Yates and Thompson and Chief Strohm were appointed to make an investigation.

Mrs. Agnes G. Gardner, a property owner on Western avenue, protested against granting a permit for a steam engine on the lot just across the street from her residence. A dairyman, who said his name was Giacomazzi, and who looked the part, told the commissioners that the engine was intended to operate a pump to be placed in a prospective well. He said that an expert had tested the ground with witchhazel and that water could be obtained only on a little knoll immediately opposite Mrs. Gardner's residence. Feeling that the chance for the engine's ever being used was excedingly remote, the commissioners granted the dairyman a provisional permit.

On the recommendation of Chief Strohm the commission voted to ask the Council for four additional hose wagons for use in the new engine-houses.

Applications of J. A. Clark for a gasoline engine permit at No. 3205 South Main street, and the Raymond Oil Burner Company for a steam boiler permit at No. 837 West Forty-first street, were referred to the Chief for investigation.

CONTRACTORS THINK THEY SEE A MOSES.

CONTRACTORS see in the new Charter Revision Committee the Moses that is to lead them out of the wilderness of litigation arising out of the Vrooman Act and into the Promised Land of spot cash for street improvement.

Litigation over the payment of assessments levied for improving streets under the provisions of the Vrooman Act has assumed almost alarming proportions. So many assessments have been declared invalid through some technicality in this statute that many contractors regard bidding in a street under the ten-year payment provision of that act much like taking a chance at China lottery. Almost any contractor will make a cash bid for improving a street 20 per cent. lower than he will bid for work done under the Vrooman Act.

City Attorney Mathews has extended hope to the contractors and to property owners as well, that the city can perfect a street-improvement amendment to its present charter that will allow property owners time in which to pay for improvements, but that will obviate the objectionable features of the bond act.

The City Attorney is now working on a skeleton plan for this amendment to be presented at the first meeting of the Charter Revision Committee. Just when this committee will meet has not yet been decided, for the reason that President Bowen of the City Council, who is to act as chairman of the committee, is so wound up in the legal tangles of the Committee of Finances in the Methodist convention that his confreres do not expect him to pick up so as to notice things again inside of thirty days. Realizing this fact, the other members of the commission have about concluded to start the work without him. It was agreed yesterday to ask President Bowen to call the first meeting of the commission next Friday night. Then the other four members can organize and receive suggestions for charter amendments. President Bowen of the City Council, City Attorney W. B. Mathews, ex-Mayor Fred Eaton, City Engineer Harry Stafford and Frank Finlayson comprise the commission.

"There seems to be a general demand for a street-improvement amendment that will take the place of the Vrooman Act," said Mr. Mathews yesterday, "something that will be a little less abtruse to the lay contractor, and to the property owner who has to pay the bills. With the experience gained by ten years of operation under the Vrooman Act we should be able to draft an amendment that would retain the good features of that statute and avoid those that have caused litigation.

"We have the right under the charter to pass an ordinance allowing a property owner time in which to pay for street improvement. San Francisco has adopted such an ordinance, and no more Vrooman Act contracts are let there."

The street-improvement amendment if passed will be part of a general revision of ordinances relating to the care and improvement of city streets. The Council has requested the commission to consider an amendment embracing the election of a Board of Public Works, which shall supervise all street work. This includes the abolishment of the offices of Superintendent of Streets and City Engineer and makes provision for the appointment of provisional heads for these departments who would bear the same relation to the Board of Public Works that the Chief of Police does to the Police Commission.

The question has been raised repeatedly of what would happen to the successful candidates for the offices of City Engineer and Superintendent of Streets at the next election if the electors at the same election should vote to abolish the offices. To many it looks as though the men who make the race for these offices would have to take chances on finding a position at the end of the course. City Attorney Mathews explained yesterday that the provision of the amendment affecting those offices would not go into effect until the end of the term.

"The case would be similar to that of the Board of Education," said Mr. Mathews. "At the last city election an amendment was passed that seven members of the board should be elected in the future in place of nine and that they should be elected at large. The members of the board elected at that time have held office since, but at the next election but seven will be ejected and ward lines will be disregarded. A similar provision would have to be made for the offices of City Engineer and Superintendent of Streets."

Other matters to be discussed by the Charter Revision Committee will be the extension of the scope of the Civil Service, so as to embrace laborers in the different department and the creation of the office of Municipal Purchasing Agent.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

NO PROVISION FOR MINOR HEIRS.

MRS. FOSTLER OMITS CHILDREN FROM HER WILL.

Jacob J. Fostler, Executor and Sole Legatee, Petitions the Court to Have Entire Estate Distributed to Him—Light Thrown on Very Remarkable Case.

Charles J. Fostler, aged 7 years, and Mildred M. Fostler, aged 11 years, are each entitled to about $7000, but they don't know it, and if the estate in which they are interested is distributed without their rights being asserted, these minors will be losers by just so much.

And the petition for distribution is to come up before Judge Wilbur tomorrow.

The case is a rather exceptional one. Under the law of this State a father or mother may not disinherit a child save by deliberate intention; they may not, in other words, omit to make mention of a child or children in making a will, for in such case the ignored offspring can go into court either in person or, if a minor, by guardian, and claim one-third of the estate. Though that provision of the law is explicit enough, trouble is continually cropping up either through ignorance of it or in attempting to evade it.

In January of last year Mrs. Caroline Fostler died in this city, and her husband, Jacob Fostler, applied for and was granted probate on her will. The will had been made in October, 1900, and was very short, leaving all of her separate estate to her husband — sole legatee and devisee. He also was appointed sole executor. The two children, Mildred and Charles, were not even mentioned in the will.

The deceased left in round figures community property valued at about $10,000, and which naturally goes to the husband. The separate property was represented by a note, secured by a mortgage, for $21,800, and that was all.

Attorney W. A. Strong, representing Mr. Fostler, has filed a petition for partial distribution under the will, but instead of being a partial distribution that is asked for, it is a final distribution, for the court is being requested to order the note and mortgage surrendered over to Mr. Fostler as sole legatee. This petition will come up for hearing tomorrow, and if by any chance it should be granted the estate would be wholly distributed. Then on Tuesday morning the first report in the Fostler estate comes up for hearing, but if the estate is distributed the day before, the first and any other old report won't be worth the paper it is written upon.

There are several funny tangles, but the overshadowing one is where the rights of the two children are left unguarded. For all that is known to the contrary, the father may care very fondly for his children, and all the money that he has may be theirs some day, but, notwithstanding, two-thirds of their mother's estate belongs to them despite the terms of the will, and so far no application has been made to the court by anyone in their behalf. Being minors, they cannot sue or be sued, save through a guardian, and ordinarily a legal guardian is appointed for the purpose of receiving any estate to which a minor may be entitled, and making a fight in court when the rights assured under the law are denied, either through the ignorance of any of the parties concerned or by deliberate intent.

The facts in this Fostler case are unusual, and for that reason attention has been attracted to it.

SUICIDE POSTPONED.
MRS. HILLMAN HEARD FROM.

The scrap between Attorneys Ladd and Davis as to whether Mrs. Hillman is in the habit of getting intoxicated, and whether she is a fit and proper person to have charge of her little boy, was resumed before Judge Bledsoe yesterday.

Mr. Ladd relieved what anxiety the court might have felt regarding the threatened suicide of Mrs. Hillman, by saying that his client had telephoned him late on Friday night saying that she and her boy were all right, and that when all the fussing was over they would make their reappearance in public.

Henry J. Stevenson, who has an office opposite to the one occupied by Mr. Ladd, said that Mrs. Sheldon, one of the ex-employés of Ladd who testified against Mrs. Hillman, had told him that as Mrs. Hillman had not paid her she intended going over to the opposition and intended to beat her.

Miss Mary McKenzie, a school teacher and a very quiet-mannered young woman, stated that during the time that Mrs. Hillman had remained in her mother's home she had never seen her in an intoxicated condition, nor had she ever seen her do anything that reflected upon her in any way. She had once or twice noticed from her breath that she had had a drink of liquor, but that was all.

"The case is even stronger in favor of the wife," said the court, "than it was yesterday, and I'm led to believe that other motives animated these two ladies in saying what they did regarding Mrs. Hillman than the good of the child."

The matter was dismissed, and Mrs. Hillman with the boy may now come out of hiding.

WANTS THAT MONEY.
MRS. HOLLIDAY FIGHTING YET.

Mrs. M. P. T. Holliday was a daughter of the late Senator Thurman, of Ohio, and her husband was "Bud" Holliday of baseball fame. Mrs. Fannie Holliday and her brother and sister-in-law got tangled up in family disputes, and Mrs. Fannie went to the house one day in a bellicose mood. "Bud" Holliday and his wife were at Santa Monica and it, perhaps, was just as well that they were. Anyway, Mrs. Fannie began poking her parasol through the mirrors in the parlor and otherwise wrecking the furniture. By way of aftermath Mrs. Fannie was arrested at the instance of her relatives on the charge of threatening to burn their property and shoot, stab and kill them. Later the case against her was dismissed, and she turned around and brought suit to recover from "Bud" Holliday and his wife $25,000 as damages for malicious prosecution. The trial resulted in Mrs. Fannie getting the worst of it, but the case was appealed and the Supreme Court granted a new trial and the second times she was more fortunate. The jury gave a verdict in her favor for $500. That was on May 1, 1899, after the fighting had continued in the courts for about three years. The judgment carried with it costs amounting to $262, and since then the judgment has remained unpaid. But it is bearing interest and Mrs. Fannie Holliday has just been into court filing a suit to renew the judgment so that it won't became outlawed. If ever "Bud" and his wife get any more property together—most of what they had is said to have flown away—Mrs. Fannie will find a convenient place to put it.

KITTENISH.
BRIDE AND GROOM OVER 70.

Again Justice Pierce has broken the record. This time for joining in the bonds of holy matrimony two persons whose combined ages total up 147 years.

Allen J. Druiard applied for a marriage license and gave his age at 71 years. As there was no hesitancy about his manner, that probably is the correct limit of his years. When he gave the age of his bride-to-be—Miss Sarah M. Roberts—he stated that she was 70 years of age, and there he told a tarra-diddle. The lady had pleaded guilty to five years better nearly a year ago.

This brave couple were tied up hard and fast by Justice Pierce yesterday afternoon, but, despite the confirmed habit of the justice, it has not even been insinuated that he kissed the bride this time. To the very last Miss Roberts was worldly wise. In the morning she visited the office of the Associated Charities for the purpose of drawing her $5 monthly pension, for she knew that after her marriage that fountain would dry up. After she had the $5 stowed away in her pocket the bridegroom came along and flung down his $2 for the marriage license, with all the abandon of a young buck of 20.

Mr. and Mrs. Druiard will make their home at Mountain View.

Miss Roberts is a maiden who has been residing at Sawtelle, and living on her means. Her income was in a measure derived from the Associated Charities, they giving the old soul $5 a month. Less than three years ago Miss Roberts came to California, and, according to her own account, she lived here for nearly eighteen months before appealing for charitable relief. In June of last year she put in her application, and then gave her age at 75 years. She looked it, so her word was not doubted and her age was itself sufficient guarantee that she was deserving of relief. She said that she had come to California from Albany, N. Y., eighteen months previously, that she was a rigid Presbyterian, and was a member in good standing of the "Eastern Star." She has lived with a brother, J. M. Roberts, at Sawtelle, and in addition to what she has received from the Associated Charities, Miss Roberts also was aided by the ladies of the Women's Relief Corps.

FOR FULLER HEARING.
MRS. LITTLE'S CASE.

Mrs. Fannie M. G. Little, whose application for divorce was refused by Judge Allen on Friday on the ground that she had not established a bona-fide residence here, has already taken steps to file another suit. This for the reason that she is conscious herself that she not only has had, but intended to continue to have a residence in this county.

Inasmuch as a person's intention has something to do with making proof of establishing a domicile, Mrs. Little has been advised that her residence must have been called in question most probably because the full facts were not represented to the court. Inasmuch as Mrs. Little's parents reside at Ensenada, though they have been frequent visitors to this city, where they are well known, she naturally visited them, though not abandoning her home here, and all the more frequently as her children were for the nonce left in their care.

On Friday stress was laid upon the fact that Mrs. Little left her children in Mexico, and their absence from her side was considered a proof against her having any home here. As a matter of fact, however, they were not with their mother, merely because she has been in exceedingly delicate health and has been under medical treatment.

SCHOOL CENSUS REPORT.
PERCENTAGE OF INCREAS.

All of the reports from the school districts have not yet been filed with the County Superintendent of Schools, but from those that have been tabulated it is gleaned that the percentage of increase this year over last will be greater than was last year over the preceding.

There are 138 districts in the county, and of these 87 have reported, leaving yet 51 districts to be heard from. In one district there has been absolutely no change; in 27 a loss is shown of 336 pupils, and in the 59 districts remaining there is a gain shown of 1473, or a net gain of 1137 pupils.

Los Angeles, Long Beach, Pasadena, Santa Monica and other districts that will show the heaviest gains, have not yet filed their reports; but it is learned that in all of these districts the gains show an increase over last year. The gain in 1903 over the preceding year was 6731, and this year the gain is conservatively estimated at 7000, in round figures.

NEW CAHUENGA SCHOOLS.
RESIDENTS ARE REJOICING.

The hatchet is buried at Cahuenga and all the residents are rejoicing at the fact of the $28,000 worth of bonds for school purposes having carried at the recent election. Four times the bond proposition had been knocked out, twice on the proposal to build a single schoolhouse and twice on the proposal to build three schoolhouses. But the bond issue that has now carried, and that has been advertised by the Board of Supervisors, is for the purpose of building four schoolhouses, and the vote was 99 to 29 in favor of the scheme.

One of the new houses is to be erected east of Vermont avenue and south of Melrose avenue; one east of Vermont and north of Melrose; one in the northwest part of the district, and the fourth will be on the site of the present schoolhouse. The two buildings east of Vermont avenue are to cost $8000 each, and the remaining two will be erected at a cost of $6000 each. The census returns show that the population has increased very rapidly, there being about 300 children in the district at the present time. It is believed that all of the four schools will be ready to open their doors by October 1.

The residents of Norwalk and the New River school districts were very desirous of consolidating under the name of the Norwalk district, but the District Attorney has advised against it and County Superintendent Keppel turned the petition down yesterday.

The end aimed at was to get the New River district out of the Los Nietos high-school district into the Excelsior Union high-school district, but the taxable property that would be thus removed from one district to another is very important, and the District Attorney holds that such removal can be made only in the manner prescribed by the code.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.
BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

HODGE IS SENTENCED. H. M. Hodge yesterday pleaded guilty to passing two fictitious checks, and got one year at Folsom on each offense. One check was for $10, and was drawn in the name of P. M. Turner on the State Bank and Trust Company, the other one being for $16, drawn in the same name on the Los Angeles National Bank.

A BICYCLE THIEF. Nathan Wilk, a boy 14 years of age, was arraigned before Justice Young yesterday on the charge of grand larceny. He stole a bicycle belonging to Arthur McGrath, but being under age, he was remanded to the Juvenile Court, where his case will be dealt with.

BILKED HIS FRIEND. W. A. Whetsel established his credit at Frank Demond's saloon, at the corner of Maple avenue and Fifth street, by getting the saloon-keeper to cash small checks for him. Then when suspicion was lulled he rang in a bogus check for $15, drawn on the First National Bank. He pleaded guilty to the charge yesterday and was sentenced by Judge Smith to one year at Folsom.

DIAMOND PRICES TO BE ADVANCED

DE BEERS COMPANY'S RISE

Concern Controlling Output Makes Another Addition to Rates and Dealers Must Follow Suit.

[SPECIAL CABLE TO THE HERALD.]

LONDON, Saturday.—There is consternation in the boudoirs of Belgravia, for the jewellers say that before long there will be a sharp, sudden rise in the price of diamonds, owing to various causes.

When the rise will take place depends first of all on the duration of the strike of the diamond cutters of Amsterdam, where all the world's precious stones are cut and polished. Then there is the fact that the De Beers company has decided to advance the price of all grades of diamonds five per cent, this to go into effect immediately, it being the fourth advance during a year.

As the De Beers company controls something like ninety per cent of the world's output of diamonds and as they are restricting the supply, it follows that the prices demanded by jewellers must go up very considerably.

We commenced our selling season of women's suits at least a month in advance of other stores. We propose to begin our closing out sale one month before most stores consider such a step.

We have enjoyed a remarkably big business in women's suits this year, particularly on account of the splendid styles we have secured, and because our prices were found to be the lowest in the community.

Right now is the real opening of the spring season—the very time when most women feel the need of a tailor-made suit—and here comes this opportunity to select any suit in our store at a most remarkable reduction.

Without exception every tailor-made suit has been marked down and placed in one of the following five lots.

GREAT GLORY TO MONAGHAN.

Young Arizonan Annexes the Honor List Entire.

Wins High Average for the Second Day's Shoot.

General Improvement Noted in Average Scores.

Shooting a steady gait, brilliantly consistent, always in the money and pulverizing his birds with the unfailing facility that characterizes the average ammunition manufacturer's agent, C. B. Monaghan of the Needles, a simon pure amateur yesterday hammered himself into high average for the second installment of the Los Angeles Gun Club's tournament by breaking 119 out of the 130 targets counted on percentage; was a member of the winning five-man team in which his score of 22 was a factor, and to wind up a day's achievements already more than creditable, walked off with the Tufts-Lyon individual championship challenge medal with a superb score of 24 out of 25 made under fire in the shoot-off after tieing with W. H. Seaver and Fred B. Mills at 48 out of 50 in the event, literally swimming in shooting glory. Having come hundreds of miles merely to help swell out an attendance of the finest fellows on earth, and doubtless without an idea of even paying his expenses, not to say winning some of the most prized trophies of the local club, certainly the victory of no outrider could have been received with more genuine pleasure by those defeated than was the success of this modest young man from the smelter city. When the fact is considered that Mr. Monaghan, in company with all the rest, was shooting at eighteen yards rise during the first five events, his performance becomes all the more phenomenal. Yesterday's birds were not the kind that five-man teams average 97 per cent. on down in Arkansas for a 100 birds per man, but were targets thrown as few clubs care to sling them, all going over fifty yards, and some touching the grass over seventy yards from the carrier.

It was almost noon when the man with the red shirt, W. H. Varian of Pacific Grove, elevated his nose and declared he perceived the presence of a rodent. The measuring stick and various long-legged trapsmen were pressed temporarily into surveyor's duty, and the verdict was unanimous, "Eighteen yards." Obviously that wouldn't do with such birds as were being thrown, and the stakes were driven six feet closer in, after which scores bettered slightly. All the first day's averages were made at the greater distance, and the only way to account for its being is that in laying out the traps measurement was made from the back of the bulkhead instead of from the trap block.

A crowd fully as large as that of the first day was in attendance, some of the worthies, including the Schuetzen Park squad, headed by Woodenshoes Singer, arriving to late to participate in the average events, and hence too tardy to break into the official score. Whether the action of Messrs. Hauerwaas, Winstel, Singer and others was prompted by a knowledge of this fact may be surmised by examinations of their scores which intimately suggested the duck marsh. In fact, Mr. Hauerwaas gave orders for the erection of a substantial blind opposite the shooting score, and today will deliver the lead goods from Aunt Betsy's yard-long barrel, snugly ensconced in the tules thereof. Joe Singer, handicapped by the loss of his watch, was unable to time the birds properly, and failed to chloroform them with the successful results attained by a certain gentleman who visited Singer's room one night not long since with a bottle full of the A. & H. brand of anti-insomnia. Winstel will bring a duck call today, and expects to bring 'em back for the second barrel.

Straights were not sufficiently uncommon to excite comment yesterday. Everybody recovered his batting eye in the first day's saucer smashing, and in the first event the keen hands got to work. Vaughan, Charlie Julian, W. H. Varian, T. A. Work, C. B. Monaghan, F. Stone and Jim Gibson all knocked out their preliminary ten without a skip. Lovelace, Vaughan, Seaver, Inman, Reed, Mills, Julian, Smith, Ecker, Varian, Justins, both Gibsons, Mead, Robertson and Daniels all tore off straight fifteens, and Sam Smith proved the sensation of the team shoot by clicking off his twenty-five without a bobble, or a doubtful bird, every one being whacked squarely in the middle. Frank S. Ecker of San Diego was also among those present with the big score throughout, and the snappy accuracy of his style attracted much favorable comment from the other shooters. Mr. Ecker, who is a gunsmith, shoots a gun mostly built by himself, and handles the piece as if it were part of him.

W. H. Seaver and the pump gun were again in evidence. "Little Willie" crept up two on Vaughan for average on the two days, and Vaughan now leads with 275 on the two days to Monaghan's 273 and Seaver's 272. The race today will be warm.

The team race would have excited more interest than it did had not the first five at bat run up a score that was plainly good enough to win. Fred B. Mills 23, Frank S. Ecker 23, O. O. Orr 21, C. B. Monaghan 22, C. L. Julian 22, total 111, is what the rest had to go up against, but if the others had all done as well as Sam Smith it would have been easy. The second team was made up of Vaughan 22, Lovelace 20, Inman 21, Van Valkenburg 20 and Smith 25, for 108. Daniels 19, Seaver 22, Justins 23, Reed 24, Robertson 22, for 110, were the third team; had Daniels shot up to his average they would have tied at least. Knight 22, Gibson 23, Brison 14, Stone 22, Hagerman 20, for 101, were the fourth, and Work 21, G. Julian 18, Harrison 21, Carr 22, Varian 23, for 105, the fifth team.

Seaver, Mills and Monaghan tied for the Tufts-Lyon medal; Seaver being in for the birds did not shoot off. Monaghan scored 24, Mills 20. Vaughan and Inman 45, Reed 44, Ecker 43, Lovelace 42, Justins 41, Parker and Harrison 39, Daniels 38, were the other scores.

Today is the grand finale, with some of the best things of the shoot reserved. The biggest crowd of the tournament is confidently expected.

PITTSBURGH'S POOR PITCHERS.

Manager Dreyfuss Badly in Need of Twirlers.

Can't Get Help from Other League Magnates.

Dillon Sadly Missed by Mr. Morley's Players.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There appears to be no desire on the part of other National League magnates to help President Barney Dreyfuss of the Pittsburgh Club out of the bad predicament in which he finds himself and his team by the almost total failure of his pitching staff to develop the form expected this season. The poor showing of Philippi, Leever, Camnitz, Scanlon and other highly-regarded twirlers, makes an immediate accession of pitching strength desirable and necessary, but Dreyfuss, despite his great personal popularity, finds that he is thwarted at every turn. It appears probable that if anything can be done, it must be through the medium of the minor leagues, and there appear to be few pitchers in that division capable of making a good showing in high-class company.

MORLEY DISAPPOINTED.

DILLON SADLY MISSED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Jim Morley is disappointed that the National Commission has decided Brooklyn had first call on the services of Frank Dillon, because he signed a contract with that club and accepted advance money from it. Jim had an idea that he had put in a stronger case and, therefore, would carry off the decision. It is plain that the Angels miss Dillon badly. They have not that ginger and aggressiveness they displayed when he was holding down first bag. Frank seemed to have been the heart of the team. Chase is playing a creditable fielding game and doing some hitting and will undoubtedly make his record on the diamond, but he lacks the experience of his predecessor, who was a natural-born leader.

VENTURA LOSES.

SANTA BARBARA, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The girls composing the Santa Barbara High School basketball team defeated the Ventura High School team here today in a close and well-played game by a score of 3 to 2. The Ventura girls proved cleverer at passing and getting possession of the ball, but were outclassed at goal throwing. A large crowd witnessed the game.

RIVER TOO NARROW.

Columbia, Yale and Cornell Crews Won't Row in Memorial Day Regatta.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Plans for a big intercollegiate crew race in connection with the American Henley regatta to be held at Philadelphia on Memorial Day, under the auspices of the American Rowing Association, received a severe setback last night when it was announced that both Columbia and Cornell had decided not to enter their crews. This leaves only three sure entries in for the 'varsity race—Pennsylvania, Harvard and Georgetown. Yale has not given a definite or final answer to the invitation extended by the stewards, but it is thought probable that the blue will follow the course of the two colleges mentioned and decline. It is known by those in close touch with rowing at New Haven that there is much opposition to the entry of the Yale crew. The withdrawal of the Columbia and Cornell eights comes as a surprise, however, for it was believed that they were among the strongest supporters of the movement. Manager James Meyer of the local university crews gave as the reason for the action the fact that the contest between the different college crews would have to be rowed in heats. The Schuylkill River is not particularly wide at the point where the races are to be held, and as a result, with six or seven eights entered it would be necessary to row the races in heats. This would mean that the winning combination would be called upon to cover the course of one mile and 550 yards at least twice.

CITY LEAGUE BALL.

TWO GAMES THIS AFTERNOON.

The City League will have two games at Chutes Park this afternoon, the first one beginning at 1:30 o'clock sharp. It will be between the Tufts-Lyon team and the Woodmen. The second game will be between the Hamburgers and the Owl team. The line-up has been changed from what was shown last Sunday and good ball is promised today.

The line-up of the second game is as follows:

Hamburgers.		Owls.
Settles	pitcher	Lynn
Bills	catcher	Le Brandt
Stamps	first base	F. Bowman
S. Rafferty	second base	G. Adams
Nichols	third base	Cramer
L. Moore	shortstop	T. Adams
Ellis	left field	G. Bowman
Ritter	center field	McQuade
R. Rafferty	right field	Lepper

A Loss to Tennis.

Tennis will be crippled this season by the loss of Frank Hart of Sierra Madre, who made a splendid showing last year and gave promise of being a cup holder after the coming annual fray. Hart has been forbidden racquet wielding by his physician because of acute heart trouble—his case being similar to that of Lewis R. Freeman—and he will abstain from the strenuous sport for a year. Hart is 6 feet 2, and weighs 204 pounds, and from appearances is in the best of health. He will be missed in tennis circles.

AFRICANDER'S FINE FETTLE.

Shapely Bay Will be Seen in Action Soon.

Song and Wine the Best Two-Year-Old of Season.

Fifteen Probable Starters for Chicago Derby.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Africander, the champion three-year-old of last season, will soon be seen in action. The gallant son of Star Ruby-Afric Queen has rounded to unexpectedly fast in the last few warm days, and it is the intention of Bob Miller, his trainer, to enter him in some races at Morris Park toward the close of the present meeting, preparatory to sending him to the Brooklyn Handicap post.

"Africander," said J. J. Ryan today, "is now the grandest looking race horse I've seen this year, not even barring Irish Lad, and I own a few pretty good ones myself. He has come to hand in splendid style, and is now reeling off miles in his workouts over Gravesend track that show he possesses all his old-time speed and endurance. The shapely bay never looked better than today. He has developed from a three-year-old into a four-year-old better than any champion I ever saw."

BEST TWO-YEAR-OLD.

It begins to look as if Newton Bennington might have been mistaken when he thought that Right Royal, his $16,000 colt by Rapallo-Mrs. Delaney, and his favorite candidate of three he has nominated for the National Stallion stakes, to be run at Morris Park on Saturday, May 21, was a better two-year-old than Song and Wine, for whom he paid $14,000 as a yearling. In the aftermath talk of Metropolitan Day, heard at Morris Park, it was the general opinion that in Song and Wine Mr. Bennington has the best youngster he has thus far uncovered. Song and Wine's victory in the Juvenile stakes on Thursday was really a greater achievement than at first thought appeared.

MUNROE'S BRAG.

WILL WHIP JEFFRIES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] While Jim Jeffries is working with a will at Harbin Springs, Jack Munroe is getting into condition at Hot Springs. Tim McGrath, who is to take charge of Munroe and who has arranged to oversee his work at Sheehan's Tavern, received the following letter:

"HOT SPRINGS, May 1.—Dear Tim: Do not worry about me because I am not in California. I am happily situated here and am training hard for the coming bout. I shall leave here in about a week and will drop into San Francisco about May 15. I never felt so well in my life as I do now, nor was I ever so heavy as at the present time. I am hard as nails and will be able, as sure as I live, to put away the big boilermaker. We will then go on the road and get money.

[Signed] "JACK."

AUTO TRIP.

RUN TO SANTA BARBARA.

Charles Fuller Gates and Billy Schroeder returned Friday night from an automobile trip to Santa Barbara and report having had a delightful outing. They left here Thursday morning at 7:30 o'clock in a twenty-horse-power Dumont car and their net time to Santa Barbara for the 110 miles was 5:53, the roads being in very fair shape. The route was to Hollywood, Cahuenga Pass, Encino, Calabasas, then along the old grade through Conejo Pass to Springfield, to Montalvo, El Rio, Ventura and Santa Barbara. The run from here to Ventura was made in four and one-half hours. The time for the first fifty miles was a little better than twenty miles an hour.

On the trip back they left Santa Barbara Friday morning at 7:30 o'clock and their net running time was six and one-half hours. There were no special incidents on the trip and no mishaps.

HONORS GO TO HARVARD.

Three High School Teams Also in Contest.

Coach Hempel Makes Events Move Rapidly.

Short Course Spoils the Coast Running Record.

Harvard School won the honors of the second annual interscholastic field day of the Los Angeles County High School Athletic League on the Harvard grounds yesterday.

The competing schools were the Los Angeles, Pasadena and Compton High schools, and the Harvard Military school. Compton, however, was only represented in one event, the shot-put, in which it scored first place.

The final score was: Harvard, 41; Pasadena, 22; Los Angeles, 25, and Compton, 5. First place counted five points, second place three points and third place one point. Nearly all the records made were creditable and some of them remarkable for high-school lads.

The time for the 220-yard dash, won by Gartzman, was given as 22 1-5s., which breaks the Coast record. On remeasuring the distance, however, it was found that the course was short over eight feet, which will make the time void. It was nevertheless a pretty race, and probably as fast as the distance has ever been made in Southern California on a curved track. Hendrickson of Pomona College has made the distance on a straightaway in 22 3-5s., which is the best official time ever made here for that length.

Donnell won the 50-yard dash in 5 4-5s., and Gartzman did the 100-yard dash in 10 1-5s.

Graves threw the hammer 128 feet, and Gernnill put the shot nearly thirty-nine feet, which are considered notable feats for high-school lads.

Lacey's vault of 9ft. 10in. was also remarked a creditable performance.

Gartzman of Harvard was the bright particular star of the day, winning two firsts and one second places, and also assisting materially in winning the relay race for his school.

Nearly 500 persons, mostly students of the schools represented, witnessed the meet. At times there was plenty of enthusiasm, but as a rule, the spectators took things very quietly.

The grounds were in good condition, and the day ideal for athletics, both of which helped in a large measure to make possible the excellent results.

Walter Hempel, the Pomona College coach, acted as referee and kept events moving in his usual businesslike way. There was no lagging from the first crack of the pistol to the last race. To those who have attended interscholastic and intercollegiate field meets in past years this was not the least pleasing feature of the day.

The order of events and the results follow:

Hurdles, 220 yards—Owen, Pasadena H. S., first; Sholls, Los Angeles H. S., second; time 28 secs.

Running broad jump—Gibbs, Pasadena H. S., first; Stanton, Harvard, second; distance 20 ft. 11¼ in.

Run, 440 yards—Kellogg, Harvard, first; Severy, Pasadena H. S., second; no time given.

Twelve-pound hammer throw—Graves, Harvard, first; Owen, Pasadena, second; distance 128 feet.

Dash 50 yards—Donnell, Los Angeles H. S., first; Gartzman, Harvard, second; time 5 4-5 secs.

Pole vault—Lacey, Pasadena H. S., first; Johnson, Los Angeles H. S., second; height 9 ft. 10 in.

Dash, 100 yards—Gartzman, Harvard, first; Donnell, Los Angeles H. S., second; time 10 1-5 secs.

Twelve-pound shot put—Genmill, Compton H. S., first; Lee, Pasadena H. S., second; distance 38 ft. 9 in.

Dash, 220 yards—Gartzman, Harvard, first; Donnell, Los Angeles H. S., second; time 22 1-5 secs. (not allowed on account of course being short.)

Running high jump—Hotaling, Pasadena H. S., first; Sterling, Harvard, second; height 5 ft. 4 in.

Mile run—Lee, Harvard, first; Curl, Los Angeles H. S., second; time 5 minutes 1 3-5 secs.

The relay race was won by the Harvard team, composed of Cole, Lee, Kellogg, Stanton, and Gartzman.

The 880-yard run, which did not count in the final score, was won by Severy of Pasadena. Stanton of Harvard took second place.

CHICAGO DERBY.

FIFTEEN PROBABLE STARTERS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Fifteen horses will, in all probability, go to the post in the Chicago Derby, which is to be run on the opening day of the Hawthorne spring meeting, one week from Saturday. Secretary Harry Kuhl of the Chicago Jockey Club has written the owners of horses eligible for the first big event of the local racing season, asking what chances their nominees have of starting. He has received answers from most of the owners likely to have starters, and expects fully fifteen to run for the big purse.

The following list gives those who are practically certain of getting to the post, barring accidents: Bear Catcher or Militaryman from the G. Ferguson's stable; Moharib, Rainland, Elwood, Prince Silverwings, English Lad, Marquis de Carabas, Merry Pioneer, Proceeds, Hazelwood, Bill Curtis and Japan.

Word has reached the Hawthrone authorities that Ferguson will have a starter, sure, but he has not made up his mind between the best of the California 3-years-olds last winter, Bear catcher and Militaryman.

Japan is doing nicely, according to C. McDowell, and will be a sure starter of nothing goes wrong in the work.

William Oliver wired that he would start Hazelwood, which McCue has been engaged to ride in the Derby.

Mose Goldblatt wired that his Cumberland Derby winner, Rainland, would be a sure starter, and Bob Tucker, trainer for Capt. S. S. Brown, gave out Proceeds as the dependence of that stable in the Hawthorne event.

Marquis de Carabas is being pointed for the event by E. S. Gardner.

H. T. Griffin wrote that he expected to start Bill Curtis, the winner of the Ascot Derby at Los Angeles last winter.

Although the weather has not been of the best order at Louisville, Talbot Bros. hope to have Prince Silverwings in shape to start.

Charley Ellison will start Vestina Bell in the Kentucky Oaks to be run at Louisville May 18, and if he shows well he will start in the Derby here.

"Boots" Durnell expects to start Elwood in the Latonia Derby, to be run May 19, two days before the local event, but it is thought Durnell will start him here, also, if he does not go wrong.

With fifteen starters the Chicago Derby will be worth $15,880.

MORE POINTERS FOR BOWLERS.

CUT OUT CURVES AND USE SMALL BALL ADVISES KERN.

Side Alley Cross Delivery All Right for the Experts, But Too Hard for Beginners to Attempt. Other Points of the Game by the Individual Championship Winner.

Martin Kern of St. Louis, who won the individual championship at the Cleveland tourney, in giving advice to bowlers, says: "Don't start with too heavy a ball; don't get mad when you don't get a good break, and cut out the fancy plays and the curved ball. For your first attempt take a small ball, say one of twenty-five or twenty-six inches circumference. See that the thumb and finger holes are of the right size for your hand and that they are the proper distance apart. When bent the thumb and middle finger should fit naturally into the holes without straining or cramping. If you would avoid sore fingers, see that the edges of the holes are rounded. Having selected your ball, the next step is the run-up for the delivery. Take a position about twelve feet back of the foul line, facing the pins almost squarely, with the ball resting in your left hand. Swing the ball once to see that your arm is firm. Start with your right foot and take four quick steps, bringing your left foot down at the foul line on the fourth as you deliver the ball. While you are taking these four steps the ball has described one complete swing, starting from a little in front of your right leg as you start for the run and dropping from your hand a little ahead of the same position. At the moment the ball is released your feet should be far apart, with the left foot in advance and the right trailing out to act as a drag and hold you steady as your body catches the swing of the heavy ball. Both knees should be bent, the left one the most. The ball should be released when the right hand is about a foot above the alley. Place the ball on the alley rather than throw it. For a time, of course, you will drop it when you attempt to slide it on to the alley, but eventually you will be able to deliver the ball with scarcely any bumping. Some bowlers can bowl a very swift ball with an almost noiseless delivery. Now that the ball has left your hand, we will take you the direction in which it is to travel and the speed with which it is sent. When you aim for the right side of the king-pin, if you have ever played billiards or croquet or any similar game in which accuracy or direction is an important point, you will see an imaginary line from the side of the pin to the point where you are to drop your ball. If you don't see the line naturally you must draw one, and then send your ball along that line as accurately as you can. As for the speed, give it enough to carry in the direction you aimed without rolling off the imaginary line. You will gradually and unconsciously put more and more speed into your delivery as you improve in control. Now, as to the point of your end of the alley, where the imaginary line begins. For a new bowler about the middle or a little to the right of the middle is the best place to begin with. As you improve in control you can move your starting point further and further to the right. I start all my balls at a point between the gutter and six inches from it. No top-notchers bowl the middle ball, but it is a good one for beginners."

KID M'COY'S GOOD FORM.

Hoosier in Splendid Shape for Next Battle.

Fitzsimmons and Jack Root to Fight in Chicago.

Ruhlin and Marvin to Try Conclusions Again.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] When Kid McCoy meets Jack O'Brien in a six-round bout in Philadelphia next Saturday night, it is expected his showing will be a revelation to ring followers. For the past two weeks, the Hoosier has been training for the contest at White Plains, and it is doubtful if he ever will be in such good form as at the present time. Realizing that the bout means life or death, so far as his pugilistic career is concerned, McCoy plunged into training with a will and determination which has accomplished wonders. To see McCoy at the gymnasium or on the road, one cannot help but notice his improvement since his last battle. There are few boxers who can glide in and out of an opponent's reach like a shadow, but this is what McCoy does in his bouts with Harry Foley, the clever Californian. When he is not sidestepping a blow, McCoy is ducking or blocking a lead. It is in this respect McCoy has earned an enviable reputation. He can duck a blow by the narrowest margin, and can come back with a terrific wallop before his opponent has an opportunity to recover his balance. In his recent battles, McCoy showed deterioration. He entered the ring with little or no training, and the results were inevitable. He knew this was the only way to get back right, and he has succeeded in regaining his old-time form, which once made him a terror.

ROOT AND FITZSIMMONS.

Bob Fitzsimmons will probably fight in Chicago after all. His opponent will be Jack Root, a hard-hitting light heavyweight of Chicago, who secured a decision over George Gardner in a six-round bout in the Windy City last Monday night. Matchmaker Charley Felt of the Waverly Athletic Club, Chicago, was so impressed with the great showing which Root made against Gardner that he has opened up negotiations with Fitzsimmons and Root for them to meet in a six-round bout at his club within four weeks. Felt has offered the men a purse of $7000 to box for. As this amount is suitable to Fitzsimmons, there is every reason to believe that the men will be matched in a few days. Root says nothing would please him better than to get on a fight with Fitzsimmons.

RUHLIN AND HART.

Unless a hitch occurs in the final arrangements, Gus Ruhlin and Marvin Hart will meet in a fifteen-round bout in Baltimore in about three weeks. Billy Madden, acting for the Akron man, has been very anxious to arrange a longer bout between the men, being under the impression that their last six-round bout in Philadelphia was too short to allow Ruhlin to show his best form. Hart gave tacit assent to another meeting, and the Eureka Athletic Club of Baltimore offered a purse. All that now remains to be done is to sign articles, and there appears to be little probability of delay. Hart, who has been growing very heavy during the past two years, believes he can get on a match with Jeffries after the Munroe fight is over, if he succeeds in knocking Ruhlin out, and will train hard with this object in view. Ruhlin, on his part, is quite confident that he can beat the Louisville man in a fifteen-round bout, and the contest promises to be an interesting one.

TRACK RIVALS.

Horses of King Edward and Croker Will be Pitted Against Each Other at Leopardstown.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 25.—Richard Croker will have his newly-acquired residence in Ireland full during the time the King is visiting Ireland, and no end of leading lights among the sporting fraternity of New York will be there to see the "Boss" and the King trying conclusions at the Leopardstown race meeting.

In consequence of the death of the Duke of Cambridge, King Edward decided to withdraw all but a few of his horses from important racing engagements. He has consented that one or two racers which have been in training in Ireland under the care of McNally shall sport the royal colors during his Irish visit, and on each occasion he will be opposed by one of Croker's best, a horse significantly named St. Patrick's Day, which is understood to be carrying much New York money.

TRACK ATHLETICS.

POMONA FIELD DAY.

The first annual preparatory field day of Pomona College took place Friday afternoon, on the college oval. Aside from arousing high class rivalry and enthusiasm, this scheme of Coach Hemple's is to show up big benefits in next year's track squad, as much talent is being developed that otherwise would have laid idle.

The senior preparatory class won the day, with the senior middle class second. The winning team were presented with a handsome silver loving cup. The first place men were as follows: 100-yard low hurdles, Johnson, '04; 600-yard run, Rice, '05; 100-yard dash, Johnson, '04; 220-yard dash, Johnson, '04; 1200-yard run, Joos, '06; 440-yard run, Rice, '05; 600-yard relay race, '05, Gates, Birdsall, Terry and Rice; pole vault, Birdsall, '05; 12-pound shot put, Maile, '04; broad jump, Crawford, '06; high jump, Johnson, '04; 12-pound hammer throw, Phil Smith, '04.

BASEBALL NOTES.

DOTS ABOUT PLAYERS.

Rowdy Mike Donlin, who is well known in this city, has been laid off the Cincinnati club for a month for drunkenness. It will be remembered that he served a term in jail last year for assaulting a young man and a girl who attended a game in which he played.

"Lefty" Davis, who played last year with the New York American League team, and was later released, has signed a contract with the Columbus club of the American Association.

The fans are beginning to ponder over the strange fact that there is not so much kicking by the players in the league games as there was last year. This is due to President Bert's instructions about decorating the bushes with any players who become effervescent.

The Salt Lake team of the Northwest bush league is as follows: Shea, Anderson and Hansen, catchers; Wiggs, Tozer and Quick, pitchers; Slats Davis, first base; Flynn and Miller, second base; Donovan, third base; Bruyette, shortstop; Weed, Gimlin and Muller, outfielders. Catcher Andy Anderson will doubtless not be in the team, for he is now catching for the Little Rock (Ark.) club.

Jack Flannery, who played last year with the Helena team in the Northwest League, is now captain and manager of the Grand Rapids (Iowa) club.

Big Bill Sunday, the right fielder who reformed and became a minister, helped out the Rockford, Ill., team last Tuesday in a game and was there. He was six times at bat, made five runs, a triple, double and a single, and had one fielding chance without an error.

At Tournament Park, Pasadena, yesterday afternoon the U.S.C. preparatory team defeated the Throop first team by a score of 16 to 12.

HORSE LOVERS TALK OF SHOW.

Scheme on Foot to Hold a Big One Next Year.

Driving Club Plans a Fine Show This Month.

Horse Parade and Sweet Marie Are Features.

If the efforts of certain lovers of fine turnouts in the City of the Angels are crowned with success, Los Angeles may have a horseshow "as is a hoss show" about this time next year. The suggestion has been made by a personage no less than Mrs. S. W. Dorsey, and the lady has volunteered to lend her aid to the project, so it will not want for able allies.

There are at present time a number of stylish turnouts in this city and Pasadena, not to mention those maintained by the wealthy residents of Riverside, Santa Barbara and Southern California's other towns. Dr. J. A. Edmonds, who is the grand marshal of the Driving Club's horse show parade to occur on the twenty first of this month, was spoken to on the matter the other day by a local horse owner who thinks the show project quite possible, and after looking into it, the doctor was convinced the proposition was feasible enough.

In order to make it a success some good sized enclosure as Fiesta or Agricultural parks would be requited; Parger Park might do. The keynote of any horse show's success is the social end, and this part of the affair would have to be left to the patronesses. Thus far it is only talk, but there is some reason to believe Los Angeles may see all its fine equipages and teams together some fine day.

The May matinee of the Driving Club is to be one of the best all around afternoon's entertainments ever given by that beneficent organization of rich men who race and drive their horses against each other once a month for the public's benefit free of charge.

The horse show parade, according to Dr. Edmonds has every probability of calling forth 250 participants, and is of itself worth going out to Agricultural Park to see. In addition to this, the Polo Club will have a half-lie dash in which the best racing ponies in Southern California will compete. R. L. Bettner, E. L. Hildebrand, M. E. Flowers, W. E. Pedley, T. H. Dudley and in fact all the leading polomen of the southland will have entries. The race will give a clear line upon the best half-lie pony in this end of the state. Charles W. Clark who recently bought a pony here will also be seen in the saddle. Then too, there will be another practice game of polo. These practive games have already made quite a hit with the public. The racing features proper, will be of a higher grade than usual. Sweet Marie will again be seen on the local track and a race is being framed up in which she will be given a chance to do her best. The Polo Club's hundred dollar cup to the trotters will be contested for this time and it is a cinch there will be more than two starters for the trophy. Indeed it is reported, though on none too good authority that H. N. Henderson really means to start one of his extensive stables, and to his valuable services to the club in the judges' stand will add the presence of himself and one of his bluebloods in a sulky on the track. It is almost too good to be true, but if hopes make facts, Mr. Henderson will certainly be there. The usual events for the slow classes will be cut down in nuber and the fleet-footed fraternity will have a chance. Harness racing of circuit class will be the attraction. Entries are already coming in.

DUFFY WILL RUN.

Arthur F. Duffy, the world's champion sprinter, will compete at the Olympian games at St. Louis. He will not go abroad this summer, but will also compete in all open championships at St. Louis.

Duffy competed in the Olympic games at Paris in 1900, and, while running in the final heat of the 60-kilometer dash, he struck a broken part of the track, which threw him to the ground, snapping a ligament in his leg. After this accident he was compelled to return to America, and no one thought that he would be able to compete again.

It has been openly stated that Duffy fears meeting the cream of the athletic world at St. Louis, but those who know the Georgetown flyer also know that Duffy has never yet been afraid to meet the best in the world.

GOOD SEASON FOR BASEBALL.

ALL SIGNS INDICATE A VERY PROSPEROUS YEAR.

Big League Protection Has Worked no Particular Advantage to Coast League, but Has Taken Some of Its Players—Benefits May Come Later on.

The baseball season throughout the entire country has had such an auspicious opening that the indications are that the present year will mark one of the best seasons the game has had for a long time. The attendance has been fairly up to the expectations of the various managers, where the weather was not bad, and in many cases it has exceeded what the magnates had hoped for. This is an evidence that the game is increasing in popular favor, and the size of the crowd of spectators, shows that the article of ball that is being put up is sufficiently good to draw the crowds.

Just how long the peace agreement between the two big leagues will last can only be guessed at, but whether they hang together is really a matter of indifference to the average fan who pays his money to see good ball. It is very easy for one or the other of the big leagues to imagine it is getting the worst of something, and when it comes to this condition, it's back to the bush leagues with all the annual peace agreements.

The Pacific Coast League having joined the baseball trust, is no longer an "outlaw" organization, but just what it gained might better be guessed at than described. Pitcher Dammann has gone to the Spokane club of the Northwest bush league. Ned Hanlon of Brooklyn made Manager Ely of the Portland club cough up about $1900 for Shortstop Castro, who has very much the appearance of the gold brick that Manager Harris generally gets in every prize package he buys. First Baseman Dillon was taken away from the Los Angeles club by the same Hanlon, and what has the league got in return for these players?

COAST GETS LITTLE.

Nothing that anyone can notice, and in addition the Coast League clubs must tamely submit every year to a draft of any players the big league may want to the number of three. It is believed that there is some sort of "protection" thrown around the Coast League by the big leagues, but just what this is no one seems to know. It is asserted that by means of this protection, the Coast League clubs can discipline their players by suspensions without the fear of having them jump to some eastern club. The experience of the league last year shows that this scheme of discipline can be worked any time without any "protection," for any player that it is necessary to suspend for drunkenness, poor work or disorderly conduct would probably not be snapped up by any eastern manager. The players who left this league last year could have been retained if they had been wanted without any "protection" from anyone except themselves.

This "protection," however, has been given and accepted, and the fans on the Coast must make the best of whatever it is. In return for it the Coast League clubs have been given the "right" to draft players from all the leagues in Classes B, C, and D—a right the Coast League has always had if it could come to terms with any player wanted.

Whether or not the Coast League will be allowed to draw players from the Class A leagues, is a question that has not been settled and in all probability the "right" will be denied. Neither Manager Harris of San Francisco nor Manager Morley of Los Angeles are sure of the league's position with regard to Class A players.

Outside Game [illegible] Black Eye [illegible]

All Around Prospect [illegible] a Day's Sport.

Corbina and croakers have [illegible] ning at the southern beaches [illegible] the week just closed and some [illegible] sized fish have been taken [illegible] at various of the vantage points [illegible] the western coast. Weather [illegible] little warmer has put the [illegible] rieties of fish more on the [illegible] those who visit any of the [illegible] sorts today will stand some [illegible] being rewarded for their pains.

The corbina particularly [illegible] up in size for their shyness [illegible] thus far. Last Sunday though [illegible] short hurricane was blowing [illegible] Terminal, the big fellows [illegible] be chased away and they [illegible] in sampling the choicest [illegible] had to offer, some fine [illegible] being the proof that [illegible] theory regarding disinclination [illegible] fish to bite in the wind.

Not many have tried the [illegible] in the bay, though midweek [illegible] adds the most likely time [illegible] them. Many croaker [illegible] realize that the spotfin [illegible] ingly shy fish; as wary [illegible] trout. If he sees, hears or [illegible] thing uncanny he speedily [illegible] all ideas of biting and [illegible] to some remote point [illegible] seems more sure. Crowds [illegible] men and croakers do not [illegible] as many of the rodsters [illegible] in their sorrow.

The outside game, while [illegible] a trial, is not very popular [illegible] present. In fact, the storm [illegible] Sunday has scared many [illegible] side trollers out. That big [illegible] up so suddenly and with [illegible] warning that many figured [illegible] their good luck and not the [illegible] management that prevented [illegible] caught far at sea in it. The [illegible] cuda, yellowtail and bass [illegible] ing around with open mouths [illegible] and those lucky enough to [illegible] will doubtless have some [illegible] Not until a week of really [illegible] has brought the big fish to [illegible] of the ocean can any [illegible] tive sport be expected in [illegible] branches of angling, however.

Reports from San Pedro [illegible] cate the spotfins are dividing [illegible] with the China croakers. [illegible] remembered by anglers that [illegible] present time last year [illegible] croakers began to run [illegible] and many fine ones were [illegible] are a good-sized fish, very [illegible] ers and fierce biters, quite [illegible] ing home for breakfast, and [illegible] nipresent clam serves [illegible] whet their appetites. A [illegible] are running alongshore now [illegible] yellowfins have been taken [illegible] but the big run of these [illegible] fellows does not seem to [illegible] as yet.

Lovers of small fish will [illegible] ward in the pursuit of [illegible] ring and mackerel. These [illegible] running in a desultory [illegible] dondo early in the morning [illegible] a few mackerel fishers [illegible] time engaged in snaring [illegible] remainder of Redondo's [illegible]

All told, there is a fair, [illegible] sational prospect for a day's [illegible] a hundred to one bet that [illegible] will be more favorable than [illegible] this time last week.

AUTO RECORD ALONG COAST.

First Car Through There to San Diego.

[illegible] and Three-quarters Hours Net Time.

One of Most Picturesque Tours in America.

[illegible] touring in Southern California offers greater scenic pleasure [illegible] any other part of this broad [illegible]. This is the best evidence of [illegible] who have roamed over the [illegible] seen the sights, and experienced [illegible] delights that other parts of the [illegible] offer before coming to the land [illegible] sunset.

[illegible] past winter more than a score [illegible] from the East brought their [illegible]. Most of these cars were [illegible] manufacture, but a few [illegible] of the most expensive European [illegible].

[illegible] these tourists spent considerable [illegible] going over the roads here in their [illegible] cars and runabout automobiles. [illegible] say our roads are good, many as [illegible] as can be found anywhere in [illegible], and some even compare favorably with the best boulevards in [illegible]. These opinions are worth [illegible] from Southern California is and [illegible] the Paradise of the automobile.

[illegible] two greatest automobile journeys in Southern California today are [illegible] this city to Santa Barbara, and [illegible] Los Angeles to San Diego. The [illegible] is the more popular because [illegible] grades are much easier and safer [illegible] of limited experience.

[illegible] road to San Diego along the [illegible], and returning inland through [illegible] Temecula and Temescal [illegible] is believed the most picturesque [illegible] distance to be found on the [illegible] continent.

[illegible] tour of about 350 miles is not [illegible] known, because the coast route [illegible] impassible to most automobile [illegible] on account of the steep grades, [illegible] sand stretches, and the fords. [illegible] of these drawbacks can be [illegible] by those who know the route [illegible] and others are gradually being [illegible] with by road builders.

THROUGH ALONG COAST.

[illegible] touring car automobile had until [illegible] succeeded in going along [illegible] from this city to San Diego. [illegible] gone as far as Oceanside [illegible] the day by being helped over [illegible] San Onofre, and then had [illegible] twenty-three miles to Es[illegible].

[illegible] Worthington of Cleveland, O., [illegible] the winter in this city [illegible] and who took part in [illegible] endurance run last [illegible] seventy odd automobiles [illegible] New York for the long [illegible] through Buffalo and [illegible] dwindled to seventeen at [illegible] only seven won medals, [illegible] the run from here to [illegible] the coast route in spite [illegible] declared impossible for a [illegible].

[illegible] experience in the Catskills, [illegible] of Cuba, and touring [illegible] and adjoining States, [illegible] chose his Stearns motor [illegible] though he had a car of the [illegible] type at his disposal. [illegible] had been pounded over [illegible].

[illegible] Worthington, with three guests, [illegible] Times Building at 8:10 [illegible] Wednesday, and at a few [illegible] 6 p.m., the big yellow [illegible] car passed the San [illegible] Courthouse, having covered [illegible] 145 miles on her own [illegible] all the fords, grades [illegible] stretches, including two [illegible] at various stops, in [illegible] three-quarter hours.

[illegible] P. Worthington, owner of [illegible] automobile, were W. C. [illegible] of Cleveland, who has thrice [illegible] Barney Oldfield; Charles Ful[illegible] and W. C. Harrington of Los [illegible].

[illegible] to Santa Ana was made in [illegible] fourteen minutes. This [illegible] time, although a stop was [illegible] garage on Ninth street to [illegible] rubber boot to protect the [illegible] chain from dust, which [illegible] twenty-three minutes, and [illegible] stop Downey to put in [illegible] which took ten minutes. [illegible] the car was under motion [illegible] forty-mile run to Santa [illegible] eighty-eight minutes, an [illegible] of nearly thirty miles [illegible] stop at Santa Ana was [illegible] enough to register, to do [illegible] any doubt as to a record. [illegible] from Santa Ana through [illegible] the great San Joaquin bar[illegible] Capistrano, is about thir[illegible], and very good much of [illegible]. It is a beautiful ride and at [illegible] particularly delightful. The [illegible] by the car was seventy-three [illegible] (elapsed time.) Three [illegible] lost at Santa Ana and [illegible] the hills to photograph the [illegible].

[illegible] is a thirty-mile run [illegible], over the new long [illegible] work was looked for in [illegible] fords. To be laid up [illegible] Flores Rancho, with only [illegible] four twenty miles, would [illegible] in record-breaking, as [illegible] inconvenience. Only six [illegible] lost at the mission town, [illegible] which was put into the [illegible] next long pull.

[illegible] of Capistrano a pullet [illegible] only slowing up saved [illegible] sundry dogs and calves. [illegible] were agreeably surprised [illegible] bad sand strip at San [illegible] had been surfaced [illegible]. The ford in Chris[illegible] was also safe, the water [illegible] over eight inches deep.

[illegible] ONOFRE'S SANDS.

[illegible] trail, El Camino Real, [illegible] marked at this point, [illegible] ford to the 200 yards of [illegible] San Onofre has never [illegible]. The much-dreaded [illegible] Onofre has never before [illegible] in a big car without [illegible], and was the worst [illegible] whole trip. A section [illegible] near the sand, has made [illegible] by spreading burlap [illegible] whole sand strip for [illegible] upon.

[illegible] under the careful handling [illegible] Worthington, pulled [illegible] beach sand, although [illegible] of the thirty-two-horse[illegible], and the five-inch [illegible] even too thin. Ar[illegible] in a dry stream, as [illegible], at least most of [illegible] was do at this time, [illegible] of deep sand, and the [illegible] through that sand [illegible] pride to the three ex[illegible] aboard.

[illegible] San Onofre has been [illegible] in two years, having [illegible] the mesa from a few yards to a half mile to make safer crossings and easier grades. The old road to the Oceanside ford of the San Luis Rey River is practically abandoned. Last year two automobiles were left overnight in this ford.

Finally the road leaves the mesa, cuts through the hills and over a well-made grade several miles in length, debouches into a pretty inland valley, far from the sea. This is a great improvement in scenery, and gives a new charm to this link between missions, which will probably be acceptable to the Camino Real enthusiasts.

These long grades bring the traveler into the Santa Margarita Valley and the ford of the river of that name is particularly nasty. This can be partly avoided by going down stream a ways.

Beyond the river the climb over Wire Mountains into the valley of San Luis Rey River is up a very steep and winding grade and down a dark cañon. Those who know, go up the river to the steel bridge, and thus come out a mile above the ford and close to San Luis Rey Mission.

Oceanside was reached at 2:53 o'clock, and here a supply of gasoline was taken, pictures snapped, soda water enjoyed and the log ornamented with the postmaster's stamp, showing the time and only fourteen minutes wasted. The net running time between Capistrano and Oceanside was less than two and a half hours, an average speed of fifteen miles, very fast over that road.

From Oceanside to San Diego is forty-two miles, half of it good road. The rest is bad, some as bad as bad can be. No real public road exists for ten miles at least, the people taking to the beach. This is why automobile users have never gone over this part of the coast route before.

Some newly-improved roads and some heavy sand made it necessary to crawl along by inches. But finally the mountain road at Sorrento was reached, and that grade, which is nearly three miles long, was a pleasure compared to the awful going all the way beyond Encinitas and, in fact, clear back to Carlsbad.

Down Rose Cañon good time was made for the first time after leaving South Oceanside, and from Sorrento to San Diego close to thirty miles an hour was the average. After reaching Old Town, no attempt to make speed was essayed, San Diego having a speed ordinance the same as Los Angeles.

SETS THE RECORD.

At exactly 5:55 o'clock the big car pulled up in front of the San Diego Cycle and Arms Company, at E and Fourth streets, and the log was signed for the last time.

The 145 miles had been gone over inside of nine and three-quarter hours, and the net time was two hours less. The time made will likely be the record for some time to come, and any kind of an automobile which gets through inside of one day on this route will have made a better record than has yet been scored on any of the endurance runs in the East.

Thursday afternoon the car pulled out from San Diego for the return trip to Los Angeles. The inland route, which is 175 miles long, was chosen, and the run to Escondido in two hours and ten minutes elapsed time was another new record. On the new grade above Pala the outside wheels slipped off the bank, and the car, which weighs 3100 pounds, hung in a perilous position over an hour, before the road could be cut away, and the car leveled. As there is a sheer drop of over five hundred feet there, it was a narrow escape.

In the early morning Friday A. P. Worthington and his guests choo-chooed into Los Angeles, after a night ride of over 185 miles.

Minor Baseball.

The Pomona team easily defeated the Occidental Club yesterday on the St. Vincent College grounds by the one-sided score of 17 to 3. There was very little to the game but Pomona from start to finish, for Occidental made nine errors. These were enough to lose any ordinary game, but in addition to this bungling, Pomona got twenty hits off Pitcher Merrill of Occidental. Four doubles in the first inning netted four runs. Three singles, a double, a triple and a home run made four more in the second, three singles, an error, a fielder's choice and a pass made three others in the third, and four came in the fourth from three singles, an error and a fielder's choice.

This was the first game of the intercollegiate series. Pomona and U.S.C. will play on the U.S.C. grounds next Saturday.

BENCH SHOW BIG SUCCESS.

CURTAIN RINGS DOWN ON THE PRIZE PURPS.

Exhibition Has Been a Fine One. Southern End of State Holds Its Own Against Northern Dogs. Turpill's Judith the Best Dog in the Whole Show.

The first annual bench show of the Southwestern Kennel Club came to an end last night at the Chutes Theater, with the distribution of the special prizes and the general farewells of the show. These good-bys were said principally by the owners, for the dogs are not particularly friendly to each other, for even after being together for the past four days, they were willing to fight each other last night when the time came to say good-by.

The bench show has been a success in every way, and while the entry list did not turn out to be as large as expected, the 200 dogs on exhibition gave the visitors a fine idea of the peculiarities of each breed. The dog owners state that it was one of the best shows on the Coast, for while not as many dogs were shown as have been at other places, they were of a better average class. Great praise is due Arthur Letts and F. H. Kirby for their untiring efforts to make the show what it has been.

A pleasant side issue of the show was the banquet given last night at Levy's restaurant by Arthur Letts, his guests being the officers and some of the members of the bench show, and the newspaper men. Apropos of the host's motto, it was a "Watch-us-Grow" feast, and the sentiment has particular significance to the future success of the Southwestern Kennel Club.

The H. E. Huntington Cup for the best cocker spaniel in the show was awarded to Portland Kid, a beautiful brown specimen of the cocker spaniel entered by the Portland Kennels of Portland, Or. This prize was for cockers other than black.

The cup offered by the Conservative Life Insurance Company for the best dog in the show was given to the English setter bitch, Turpill's Judith, owned by T. P. McConnell of Victoria, B. C. This prize lay between the setter, Letts's Ravenswood collie and a pointer dog, but was finally given to the setter. Thus it will be seen that two dogs from the Northwest took the two best prizes.

San Diego Boy World's Fair Swimmer.

FRANCIS EARL KYLE.

SAN DIEGO, May 7.—Although he has tried hard, Francis Earl Kyle of San Diego, the boy swimmer, has never been able to secure a match with anyone of his age, either boy or girl. At the World's Fair he hopes to do it. If he doesn't he will do as he has been doing—swim with older boys and girls.

Earl is 12 but he doesn't look over 10. He weighs sixty-seven pounds. While healthy and unusually strong for one of his years, he has not attained the physique of the average youngster. He realizes this and is doing what he can to hurry along his development. Mornings he is up by 6. After breakfast he takes a run of three or four miles. Upon the return to his father's bath-house he goes in the tank for a plunge, following it up with a shower and a rub down, after which he dresses for school.

Earl is an interesting lad, intelligent, full of life, and entertaining. His father, J. Kyle, is a professional swimmer, while his brother, Wilbur, and his sister, Maud, have won many medals in swimming matches for amateurs. Mr. Kyle asserts Earl started in to learn to swim when 1 year old. The most interesting souvenir of the Kyle family is the bathing suit worn by Earl before he was able to walk.

At the second anniversary of his birth he could swim, and before the third year had closed he was diving in the big tank. At 6 he challenged the State, but found no takers. During his sixth year he defeated Clare Bruschi, five years his senior, and the best swimmer of his age in San Diego. As an 8-year-old he made a record, swimming eighty feet under water, following it with a double overhand surface swim, covering the same distance in 23 seconds.

At the age of 9 young Kyle swam a race with Hutchinson, a sailor boy, and the fastest swimmer on the United States training ship Alert. It was for three heats with three-minute rests. The sailor boy won the first heat and young Kyle the second. The third was very close, but the decision was given to the Alert's apprentice. In this race Earl was matched against a swimmer seven years older than himself. When 9 years old he challenged any boy under 11 for a match in Los Angeles. He won the gold medal, swimming fifty yards in forty-seven seconds.

Since these public exhibitions the clever young swimmer has continued to improve, giving his parents and friends reason to hope to see him the winner of his class at the World's Fair. In several of his morning swims of late he has made the remarkable time of twenty yards in eleven seconds, for which the men's record is but one second faster.

HAND-BALL MATCH.

EX-CHAMPION AND EGAN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A hand-ball match, in which great interest is being shown, will be played May 14. Mike Egan, champion hand-ball player of the world has been challenged by James Fitzgerald, ex-champion of the world, and Al Hampton, at one time Coast champion, to play for $250 a side. Egan has accepted, and the match will either be played at the Olympic Club or Occidental court. Egan is confident he can defeat the pair, but feels he will have to play harder than ever before in his life. Fitzgerald ranks next to Egan as the greatest hand-ball expert in the country. Hampton has played the game for fourteen years and is the best amateur on the Coast.

BUM BALL.

VENTURA HIGH WINS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, May 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In one of the poorest apologies for a baseball game ever seen here, the team of the Ventura High School applied the whitewash brush to the ball tossers of the local High School, score 18 to 0. There was nothing to it from the start, Ventura playing fast, errorless ball and the locals going absolutely to pieces, making costly errors of judgment and booting the ball continually. The game was called off after the sixth inning. The score: Ventura, 18; hits, 10; errors, 0. Santa Barbara, 0; hits, 3; errors, 12.

CATCHES FISH IN TREETOP.

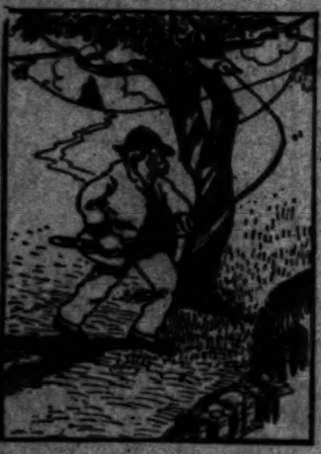
Astonishing Things Related by Trout Angler.

Amenities of First Day on the San Gabriel.

How to Ride Though Afoot. Dizzy Crossings.

There are many persons so mean and suspicious by nature that they decline to believe that live trout were caught in a treetop last week when the trout season opened.

There are persons who are even inclined to be skeptical regarding the true story about the catch-as-catch-can wrestling match between a heavyweight business man of this city and a shy, little speckled trout, which took place in a hollow of the rocks in the middle of a rainstorm.



Who Says Trout Can't Be Caught in Trees?

These were but two of the tragedies of last Sunday—the opening day of the season.

One party of devoted trout hunters never got there at all, on account of a custom that prevails in Ireland or somewhere.

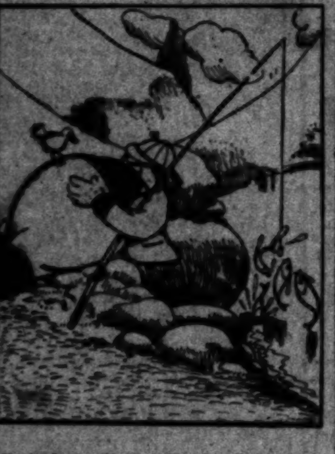
They started in a touring automobile with a wicker-bound bottle. One of the men suggested that they follow an old and charming custom of taking a long drink every time they crossed a stream, and it was agreed to. They were not all aware that the road crosses the stream something like seventy times on the way to the trout grounds.

They were found scattered picturesquely along the roadside all the way up the trail. One of them was trying to make an oration to the moon, another was barking like a dog at a boulder, and a third was lying in the middle of an icy mountain streamlet, complaining bitterly because the landlady didn't furnish bed clothes enough.

The last man was perfectly happy. He was standing up in the center of the automobile with the wicker-bound bottle high in the air. The auto was in the middle of the stream, and he was making it prance back and forth as fast as he could reverse the lever. Every time it crossed, he figured it that he had won another drink.

One of the fishing parties found a mistake had been made in their horses. There were five horses and seven men. But one of the fellows said this was dead easy. He said all they had to do was for part of the crowd to mount the horses and ride very fast for awhile; then tie the horses and walk on, leaving the others to catch up; mount the horses and pass them in turn, riding very fast. He said it was practically the same as all riding.

They looked at him with a new respect. It sounded so scientific. But after thinking it over for a long time, one of the men, toiling up the mountain side through the bush, stopped and said: "Well, this may be the same as riding, but I must say it seems a damn sight more like walking."



"Rocked to Sleep" in the Bed of the San Gabriel.

A horse with a back like a clothesline fell to the share of the heavy man who invented the great idea. They found it tied half-way up the mountain side with a note fastened to the saddle telling something about a joke of which no one could see the point.

The end of it was that nobody could find the horses, and one man arrived, just as the anglers staggered in half dead from walking, riding one horse and leading three more.

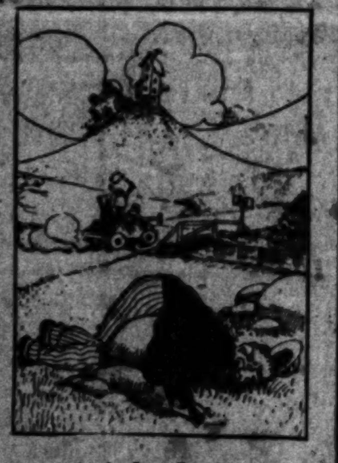
The fight with the fish came off near the headwaters.

The hero of it is manager of a great enterprise of this city.

He felt a bite on the end of his line and landed the first trout of the season with a big flop in a pool among the rocks behind him. He saw with instant alarm that the pool had an outlet down which the fish was apt to escape.

With a yell of fright he dropped the rod and made a rush for the pool. He could see the fish swimming in the half light—for it was raining and clouded dark. He tried to grab it with his fingers, but it eluded him. He raced madly around the other side of the pool, and made a vicious dab at it. He only cracked his finger bones against the rocks. He tried to kick it with his boot; but it only dashed nearer the outlet among the rocks, where he felt he was doomed to lose it.

Suddenly it gave a fiercer dash for liberty, and in desperation he threw himself madly at full length in the pool and scrambled in a furious tussle for that fish. Flat on his tummy, he thrashed and floundered and plunged and kicked in the muddy water and grabbed wildly all about for the fish.



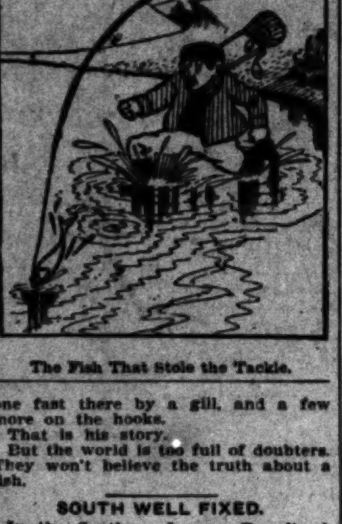
At the Last Crossing.

At length someone sung out, "Look out; the trout is swimming off with your rod!"

He looked and saw the rod floating off, towed by the fish. That wretched trout had been neatly attached to the end of his line all the time while he was scrambling in the puddle trying to lay hands upon it.

It was the same man who landed his fish with a mighty throw in the top of a tree, and had to climb up after it through the branches, which may be fairly said to be catching trout in the treetops.

This was a man of experiences. Between showers, while he slumbered and snored on the sunny side of a boulder, the fishes leaped out of the water and nibbled at his rod. They must have, for he awoke and found one fast there by a gill, and a few more on the hooks.



The Fish That Stole the Tackle.

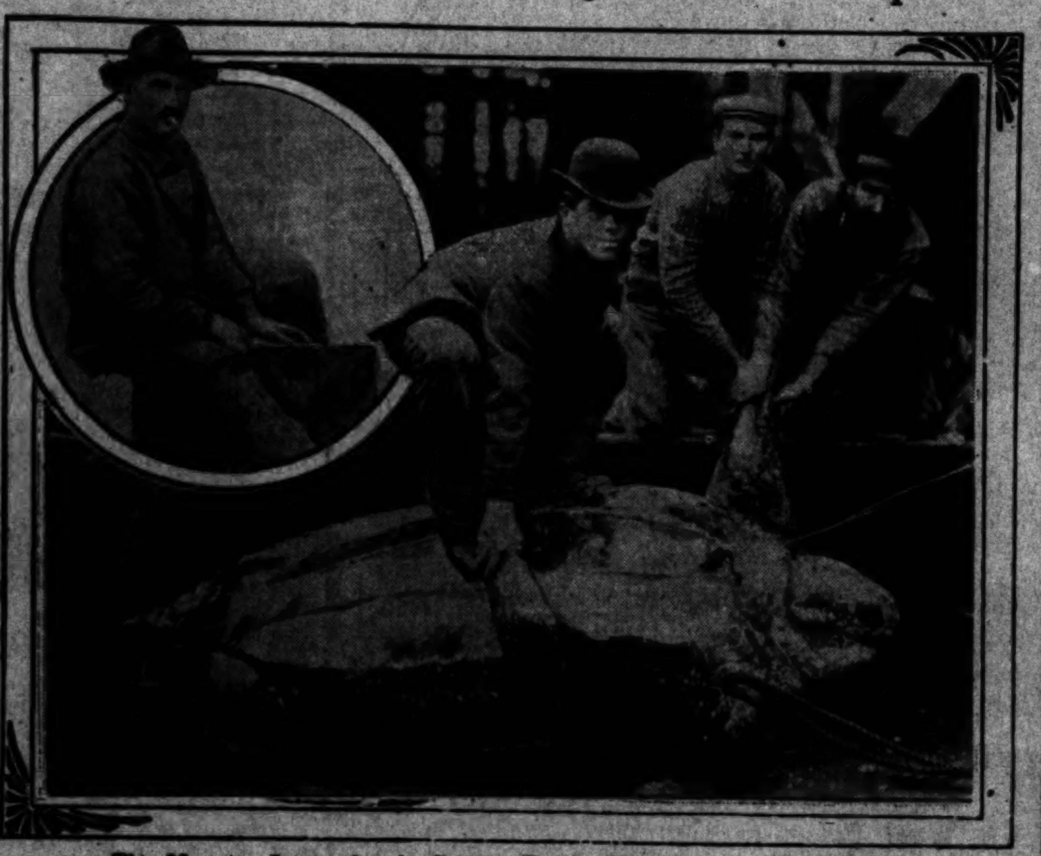
That is his story.

But the world is too full of doubters. They won't believe the truth about a fish.

SOUTH WELL FIXED.

In the Southern League Powell of Atlanta and Fisher of Nashville own their teams, while the other managers are backed by men with ample capital to carry through any undertaking in which they engage. Outside of Shreveport every town in the league made money last year, and it is doubtful if Shreveport lost much. This year the South is, if anything, in a more prosperous condition than it was last year. Last year the total attendance was over 600,000, the fourth largest in the country, and this year these figures are sure to be exceeded.

Turtle at San Pedro Largest Ever Captured.



The Monster Loggerhead—George Evich, His Captor, in the Circle.

The monster turtle, weighing about 1200 pounds, captured by George Evich in the power launch Bell Friday, has been the center of attraction in San Pedro. Hundreds of persons have viewed the huge crustacean and marveled at its size. The monster was drawn out on the beach at East San Pedro and photographed for The Times. Mr. Evich says he will send the turtle to the World's Fair. It is reported the largest turtle ever known, and the capture is therefore considered important from a scientific standpoint.

The turtle belongs to the species Festudo lyra or Sphargis mercavialia, these names having reference to the myth that the shell of some turtle was used by Mercury in the construction of the lyre. This family is Chelonian. The largest marine turtle previously captured was taken in the Galapagos group of islands several years ago and was taken to London. It weighed 850 pounds and was known to have been over eighty years of age. It was still growing at the time of its death. What the age is of the turtle captured by Evich is a matter of conjecture, but is estimated as from 100 to 300 years.

The Chelonian family of turtles possess a tail but no teeth. Jaws are provided with a horny sheath with hard and sharp edges, forming a beak like a parrot's. Marine turtles are spread over the Equatorial and subtropical seas, and sometimes stray beyond these limits, being seldom taken above San Diego. The Chelonians are diurnal animals and only a few of the family are active during the night. They are extremely rapid in the water, either to seize their prey or escape danger. The marine turtle periodically migrates to breeding stations. The species inhabiting temperate waters hibernate. The marine turtle possesses great tenacity of life, surviving injuries to which other reptiles would succumb in a short time. The heart of a decapitated marine turtle will beat many hours after every drop of blood has been drained from the body and the muscles of the trunk and head show signs of reflex action twenty-four hours after the severing of the spinal cord. Some marine turtles are herbivorous and others carnivorous, their prey consisting of fish, frogs and other small aquatic animals.

The longevity of marine turtles is a well-known fact. The limbs are modified into paddles by means of which they propel themselves with extraordinary rapidity through the water, but are unfit for locomotion on land, where the progress of these animals is as awkward as that of a seal. The toes are enclosed in a common skin out of which only one or two claws project.

The carapace on the San Pedro turtle is six feet long and five feet wide. Comparatively few are caught in the open sea, the majority being intercepted at well-known periods where they go ashore to deposit their eggs. These are very numerous, from 100 to 250 being produced by one female and buried in the sand. These eggs are usually covered with a hard, thick shell.

The great loggerhead is securely anchored under the wharf at East San Pedro with five lines out from the huge body, one forward, two aft and two amidships.

FISH FACTS AND FANCIES.

BY HAPPY ISAAK.

What is the grand hailing sign whereby one member of the great fisherman's guild immediately recognizes a fellow of the craft? For surely there is one—some magnetic influence that speeds from heart to heart and from brain to brain—the touch of nature that makes the whole world kin.

Pleasure fishermen to the lay mind present a rather stoical exterior, and appear mainly as a harmless variety of fools, spending their good money for fancy tackle without making very much noise over it or creating any disturbances of the peace. But the lay mind, in this as in most things, goes far astray in its estimate, for fishermen as a class are the warmest-hearted of men, and as for their foolishness—but that is so well established that I fear no tenable argument can be advanced against it. Still a philosopher might say that in communion with Nature alone is true wisdom to be found, and certainly he who recreates body and mind at the same time storing them with renewed health and a broader knowledge than is to be gained in the city's crowded streets cannot be set down as an unqualified, unredeemable idiot.

I met a member of the piscatorial aristocracy one day last week in a local sporting-goods store; a veteran of the crystal clear lakes of Wisconsin and Minnesota who has taken his five-pound bass on a five-ounce fly rod and snared the elusive squeteague in the weakfish months on the other coast with a sportsman's tackle. Introductions? When two fishermen meet these are the last thing. His first experience in California coast fishing was ahead of this knight of the split bamboo; the fierce, fascinating fight of the furious yellowtail struggling to tear himself free; the lance thrusts of the active little barracuda; the smashing, broadsword slashes of the giant albicore and the swift, shifting stab and parry of that steel-blue rapier wielder, the bonita, were yet to brand their mark in his experience. A rare week of sport awaits that fortunate man at Catalina. Happy indeed is he who has reached to manhood with a love for fine fishing and who having learned the game from tacklemaking up, prepares to pit his skill against the courage and strength of California's huge marine fish. It will be a fair competition and no sympathy need be wasted upon the fish. He will be the architect of his own misfortunes if captured he should be.

Now that the outside trolling season seems at hand, a general overhauling of gear is in progress. Old wornout jigs must be replaced by new ones much to the sorrow of all who are so fortunate as to possess a "Lucky" one.

The "Luck" of a jig is proverbial among trollers, yet as a matter of fact, prosaic as it may seem, the chief difference between these bone, brass and steel affairs is their action in the water, and their color. Jigs are not all alike, and some work better on certain days than on others.

The average amateur in buying a jig picks out the hardest grained, prettiest white one he can find, and then wonders why the Barracuda boys and Mr. and Mrs. Yellowtail pass it up like the white chip it is, and pay their devotions to some homely, cracked, rusty-looking affair wobbling its tortuous way alongside.

Veteran fishermen well know a dark, porous jig, symmetrical and rather deep generally, catches the fish. They do not attempt to say why, but always take that kind of faith.

Most of California's trolling is done under the boundless blue sky and bright sunlight that rules on the placid Pacific. On bright days a dark jig does not scare fish as a glittering white one does. Many a new jig, tried and found a failure, has done good work after being darkened by exposure to weather. On dark, foggy days the lighter colored jigs are sometimes successful.

Being something of a crank on the subject of catching yellowtail on much lighter tackle than that usually employed for the purpose, a friend asked recently if there is any secret to turning the trick.

Frankly, no. A knowledge of the breaking strain of tackle; a skilled boatman, a very little judgment and presence of mind will win every time, barring more than one's share of the hard luck of fishing.

Yellowtail when taking the jig behind a launch strike a tremendous blow as indeed do all big marine fish. Any attempt to stop their first rush invariably means smashed tackle. So long as the launch is under way the fish must be given all the line he will take out under fair thumb pressure and pulling against the full spring of the rod. A good boatman will throw off the clutch at the strike, and if need be reverse to help pick up ... be very obstinate. INDIAN SQUAD OF TRAPSHOTS.

UNIQUE ORGANIZATION OF THE WESTERN TARGETMEN.

How They Broke World's Record in Texas by Losing Only Dozen Bluerocks Out of Five Hundred—Some Members and Annual Custom of Trigger Pullers.

Unique among the professional trapshooting organizations is the famous "Indian Squad," organized several years ago by Fred Gilbert, C. M. Power, Charlie Budd and others of the middle-western trigger fraternity. Originally a squad of six, they have grown until now nearly every good fellow of tournament attending proclivities from Columbus, O., to Denver is a member.

Turning out occasionally in full Sioux regalia was a favorite diversion of the "Indian Squad" several seasons ago. Every season they get together at Spirit Lake, Iowa, or some other equally good place for a two weeks' vacation of fishing, hunting, trapshooting and other good times of the same sort. This year's celebration will probably be held in Indiana.

The Indians had a good representation at the late interstate shoot held in Kansas City. Ten were on hand, under the leadership of "Chief Long Talk" Tom Marshall, who has won the grand American handicap two seasons in succession and led the famous American team of trapshots which cleaned up everything in England and Scotland two years ago.

During the twelve week's trip of the Indians in the south previous to the Kansas City shoot, they broke a world's record. At Palestine, Tex., the team, composed of Tom Marshall, R. O. Heikes, W. H. Heer, Charles W. Budd, Col. Anthony and Turner Hubby lost only twelve targets out of 500, scoring the last 125 straight. As an example of what the ammunition companies make the sportsman pay for advertising, that trip cost a cartridge company $18,000.

Some of the names these "Indians" give each other are amusing. Billy Crosby is "Chief Kinnikinick;" John Burmester, "Chief Back to the Woods;" Russell Klein, "Chief Toboggan;" Chan Powers, "Chief Wipe Stick;" Chris Gottleib, "Chief Slob;" Billy Heer, "Chief Drink Water;" Fred Gilbert, "Chief Heap Talk." Crosby smokes like a furnace and uses bum tobacco, hence the name; Burmester looked like a failure at one stage of his career; Powers is the inventor of a brass cleaning rod, and the rest explain themselves.

No tournament is considered complete in the Middle West without the Indians, but thus far they have never visited the Coast in a body.

The Indians will hold their annual shoot the second week in August at West Baden, Ind.

MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at her offices, 322 S. SPRING ST., (Suite 17)
by those desiring CAREFUL CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READING BY ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.
There is a common, but erroneous belief that palmistry treats only of one's disposition and traits, and many people naturally feel indisposed to pay to hear that which they already have a good idea of.
Mrs. Masson's readings GIVE EVENTS, and are PRACTICAL, TO-THE-POINT, and founded on SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES and GOOD COMMON-SENSE. They cannot but be of assistance through the information they convey regarding the outcome of present and future events, quite unobtainable through other sources.
INVESTMENTS, CHANGES OF BUSINESS, LOSSES AND GAINS, DEATHS, MARRIAGES, DIVORCES and in fact all that life holds for you is plainly written in your hand; it is simply a question as to its correct interpretation.

EDWARD D. SILENT & CO.'S INVESTMENT DEPARTMENT.

Gives to those wishing to secure an established business the very best facilities for connecting themselves with the high-class enterprises. We investigate thoroughly every proposition that is placed upon our lists, and if we give you a certificate as to the value of a business you can rest assured you have found the right thing.

When men of long successful business experience after careful consideration INVEST IN AN ENTERPRISE it is pretty safe to assume that their conclusion is that the enterprise is SAFE and PROFITABLE.

This is the class of men who are buying the stock of the local corporation, which we are offering in lots of $100 upward, at par only.

THIS STOCK IS SECURED, cannot pay less than 6 per cent. and is an excellent chance for investors.

THE DIVIDENDS THIS STOCK WILL EARN ARE SURE TO BE VERY LARGE. Because the pump being manufactured will Raise water higher,
Raise water cheaper than any other existing.

GREAT FORTUNES RESULT FROM GOOD INVESTMENT, and you can't beat this.

Come and find out about
The men in the company.
The security of the company.
The earning power of the company.

$15,000

will secure an interest of about one-third in a large JOBBING HOUSE located in this city, whose sales for 1903 exceeded $165,000. This is a 12 per cent. dividend payer, and is an ideal opportunity for investment.

$2100

is asked for a GROCERY BUSINESS located on one of the principal arteries in the city, which is a good money maker.

$8000

will buy a GENERAL MERCHANDISING ESTABLISHMENT in mining town in Arizona, the profits in which are greater than ordinarily in an investment of five times the size.

We have other STORES LOCATED in ARIZONA and NEW MEXICO that we would like to submit in connection with the above.

$850

will buy a first-class BUTCHER SHOP in this city, which is being sold for fully $400 less than its value, owing to the working partner being obliged to go East. If you are a butcher do not overlook this chance.

$4000

WILL PUT YOU IN POSSESSION OF A TRANSFER COMPANY THAT IS NOW DOING A FINE BUSINESS AND WHOSE EQUIPMENT IS FIRST CLASS IN EVERY PARTICULAR, WITH OFFICES WELL LOCATED.

WE ALSO HAVE A LIVERY STABLE, THE EQUIPMENT OF WHICH IS COMPLETE AND WHICH IS DOING A SPLENDID BUSINESS, WHICH CAN BE HAD FOR $6000.

$12,500

IS THE PRICE PLACED ON ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL CONFECTIONERY ESTABLISHMENTS IN THIS CITY. THE BUSINESS AND PROFITS OF THIS CONCERN WILL JUSTIFY YOUR INVESTMENT. A ONE-HALF INTEREST CAN BE PURCHASED BY THE RIGHT MAN. WE ALSO HAVE A CONFECTIONERY ESTABLISHMENT MAGNIFICENTLY FITTED UP, WHICH WILL BE SOLD FOR $5000, AS THE OWNER IS DESIROUS OF GOING EAST. BOTH OF THESE ESTABLISHMENTS ARE SPLENDIDLY LOCATED WITH LONG LEASE, AT A LOW RENTAL.

$1200

is asked for a BAKERY, well located in this town, and we have another one at the same figure, which has practically a monopoly of this same class of business in a town of 10,000 inhabitants.

$3000 invested as a ONE-FIFTH INTEREST IN A MANUFACTURING COMPANY in this city will place a good live man, who knows how to meet a high grade of businessman successfully, in a position that will pay at least $100 per month, and will give, in addition, satisfactory dividends. This interest will not be sold to any but a young, hustling business man, who can take an active part in the concern.

$12,000

is asked for a DRY GOODS, MILLINERY AND LADIES' FURNISHING establishment, doing a business which shows a net profit of about 40 per cent. This is in a nearby town.

We also have for $18,000 a similar establishment with new store, new stock, and handling some exclusive lines in women's apparel.

We have HARDWARE ESTABLISHMENTS ranging from $2500 to $15,000.

$15,000

is the piece of a SAWMILL AND LUMBER BUSINESS in the northern part of the State. This includes complete sawmill equipment; last season's cut being $22,000 feet, and about fifteen to twenty million feet of standing timber.

$7500

WILL BUY A ONE-HALF INTEREST IN ONE OF THE BEST KNOWN PLANING MILLS IN THIS TOWN. THIS IS A SPLENDID CHANCE FOR A PLANING MILL MAN.

$5,000

is about the inventory value of a JAPANESE AND CHINESE CURIO STORE doing a very large business with the tourist classes. The sales of this concern are very large and profitable and they have a long lease at a low rental.

$4500

will purchase a grocery establishment in this city, located on a very good corner, with a low rental. This store does an almost exclusively cash business. We think that you will like this store.

We have several inquiries at present for small grocery establishments, doing a good business, where the stock and fixtures will not exceed $2000. Let us hear from you, as we may be able to sell your place promptly to these buyers.

We have for sale at a very low figure a leasehold on a very fine store property on Main street. If you are looking for a first class location with big floor space, at a comparatively low rental, let us hear from you.

$2500.

We have for sale at this figure, one of the best paying restaurants in the city. This place serves about 500 meals per day and is making a magnificent profit for its owner. The fittings and equipment are new and good, and the lease is a long one at a low rental. This restaurant is prominently located, and we think it is a first class buy.

$3000

invested in a dry goods establishment, well located upon a good corner, where the rental and lease are favorable, will give to a young man who wishes to start into the dry goods business an excellent opportunity. The stock is all new, purchased direct from the leading New York houses. Adjoining the place of business is a living apartment that would make an excellent home for a young couple desiring to establish a good business in this line from a modest beginning.

To Make Invisible Ink.

"There are invisible inks and invisible inks, almost without number," said George Maxwell, "but all the formulas I have ever seen are only for those which remain permanently visible.

"There is an ink, however, that may be made to appear and disappear quite at will. I think it is the only known writing fluid that will do this, and the formula and manner of its preparation are simplicity itself. Take a small quantity of saffre and dissolve it in nitro-muriatic acid, in the proportion of about one part saffre to three parts acid, though with a little less acid a stronger fluid will be obtained, but the dissolving process will take longer. It must be gently stirred until the acid has extracted the metal parts of cobalt, which turns the saffre blue. The whole solution is then to be diluted with a considerable quantity of ordinary water, say about three times as much as the cobalt solution, and it is ready for use.

"An ordinary pen may be used for this purpose, and the fluid will apparently have no more effect on the paper than so much water, becoming absolutely invisible to the eye when the written lines dry. To develop the writing it must be exposed to a gentle warmth—not too hot, for if great heat is applied the lines remain permanent. The writing then appears in a light-blue color, and when the page has cooled the lines grow gradually invisible again, but will come out promptly at any time when placed in a warm place."—[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Chicago Verdict.

Mr. Bryan is here, fellow-citizens, in the interest of his patrons of the silver mines, in the interest of his vicious little organ of Populism and Socialism, in the interest of the unspeakable Hearst, in the interest of the debt-shirkers and law-breakers, and in the interest of the covetous and the menacing and the predatory to serve notice on the Democrats of the Eastern States that they have committed the unpardonable sin. If they will recant, if they will subscribe for the Commoner, if they will permit the colossus of Lincoln, Neb., to write their platforms and their wills, with or without sealed letters, all will be forgiven.

We do not pretend to read the future, but we are confident that this will be about the last public appearance of William J. Bryan, the Socialist, in the role of a "Democrat."—[Chicago Chronicle.

"Your husband has water on the brain," announced the doctor.

"Dear me!" she replied, "I hope it has been boiled."—[May Lippincott's.

MONEY ORDERS RECOMMENDED. The executive council of the American Bankers' Association has recommended the adoption of the money-order system for use in banks, along the lines submitted by the San Francisco convention.

The place for holding the next convention has not been announced up to this time.

DEAR OLD KENTUCK. "I have just returned from eastern Kentucky, where I went to inspect some timber," said L. A. Hotchkins, as reported by the Lexington Herald. "My principal operations were in Leslie county, and I was surprised to discover a community in the United States where money is unknown, or practically so. The entire business of this community is done on the barter system. The country storekeepers exchange merchandise for anything and everything the natives have to sell, and ship this motley array of products down to Catlettsburg, where the merchant has it placed in bank to his credit, when he orders more goods, paying for them with check. These merchants usually keep a small amount of money in case it should be required, but the natives, as a rule, do not handle a cent of cash from one year's end to the other. They barter among themselves and with the merchants, and when I bought lands the most of those who sold to me would not accept my money until the merchants assured them that it was genuine. Leslie county is in the heart of the Kentucky Mountains and is very sparsely populated, which accounts for its primitive condition, but it is probably the only section of the United States remaining where the people do not know what money is."—[American Banker.

BANK COLLAPSE EXPLAINED. Cashier Outcalt of the defunct Federal Bank of New York has a very interesting letter in the American Banker for April 30, explaining how he became cashier of this peculiar institution.

From his statement it is apparent the cashier was as much imposed upon as the people—and all this occurred down in dear old New York, under the eyes of the shrewdest financiers the world has ever produced.

COMMERCIAL.

CANNED TOMATOES. The local stock of canned tomatoes is far in excess of demand at this time, consequently there is a weakening tendency, and while no change is made in prices it may be confidently expected within a short period.

AN EXPLANATION. The farmers and egg dealers, out of the city, often confuse the prices which are quoted in these columns, for their own, fully expecting to obtain 23 cents per dozen, as per yesterday's price, when they bring in their eggs. This price is the jobbing quotation, with freight, labor and incidental expenses of the jobber added, and should be so understood by all who bring eggs to this market. The Times gives this explanation for the benefit of all concerned.

CLOSING OF WHOLESALE HOUSES. Beginning Saturday the wholesale grocers will close their places of business promptly at 1 p.m. in order to give the help a half holiday.

A SOUTH AMERICAN TURTLE. Lying on the sidewalk in front of Zaiser Produce Company's store, on Los Angeles street, Saturday, was a massive turtle, with a history, and a severed jugular vein.

This turtle was an object of interest by many people passing, owing to its size and to the fact that it had been shipped from a South American port to San Francisco, thence back by steamer to San Pedro and by rail to Los Angeles from there, having traveled something over twelve thousand nautical miles during its itinerary.

CHEER UP, CHERRIES ARE RIPE. Courtland, Cal., sends greeting to Los Angeles in the shape of the first boxes of cherries for the season, which were consigned to the Keystone Produce Company. They sold very readily at $3 the box. The cherries were not so well matured, however. They may ripen up inside of a few days. They were of the Guigney variety—about the earliest of the cherries, being of French parentage.

READING "THE TIMES." Infant: Mamma, is papa a bull or a bear?

Fond Mother: My darling, on 'change your father is a bull, but at home he is a bear.

SARDINES. The sardine packers of the Maine coast are just now two months behind with their work. The first fish are usually packed in April, while this year the weirs were badly damaged by the high winds and waves, not only causing a heavy loss to nets, but creating an unlooked-for as well as disagreeable situation. The new pack will not be ready to market until about the middle of June, and prices will be very likely above the opening for 1903.

CITRUS MOVEMENT. There were 151 cars of oranges sent forward Friday and 6 cars of lemons, making the total to date 19.799.

The Grocer and Country Merchant of San Francisco says: "Our local market for Central American has been fairly active, and would be more so but for the scarcity of the medium and low grades. This particularly applies to Costa Ricas, for which Konas, which are in fair supply, are being found a very acceptable substitute. The prospects, too, are of an increased product of these latter, present prices affording the growers a little profit. The most conservative authorities are now inclined to the belief that the deficiency in receipts of Central American in this market will be quite pronounced in comparison with last year."

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

The usual amount of small vegetables comes in to market daily and no change is noted in prices.

Apples have given way to spring fruits, making them very weak in this market.

Butter continues along the even tenor of its "weigh," at the same old figure; no one knows when the board will make a change. The jobbers still manage to stick some of their daily receipts into cold storage.

Strawberries are still the feature of the market, most of which are gobbled up by the trade at ruling quotations, the rest going to packers.

Poultry continues firm at quotations with no great quantity coming to the market.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, May 7.—Today's dealings revealed a condition of neglect in the stock market fully equal to that which prevailed before the Northern Securities decision was handed down, and that had been unequaled for many years previously. Many of the most prominent stocks in the list were not quoted at all until near the close of the market, and then were only dealt in in single lots of 100 shares. Prices sank from pure inanition and no regard was paid to any news. The bank statement itself was of only nominal effect, as the large changes shown in the various items were pretty accurately foreseen. The depletion of $10,422,020 in the surplus reserve still leaves that item at $22,721,000, compared with $11,026,625 in this week last year, and $3,881,000 two years ago. There is no threat of a constriction of money supply in this showing, but the statement shows a rather pronounced process of depletion of the plethoric condition of money, both by cash reduction through gold and loan expansion. The lodgment of capital thus effected, as in the New York city bond issue this week and the Japanese loan to come, gives some relief from the [illegible] large amounts of capital which has shown signs of some pressure for outlet in the railroad bond market.

The tone of the bond market has been rather weaker than stocks. United States [illegible] registered have declined [illegible] the coupon, [illegible] and the old 4s [illegible] the new 4s [illegible] per cent. on call during the week.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, May 7.—[illegible]

the market closed steady with July at 88¾.

The tone of wheat has a depressing effect on corn prices, but there was support from pit traders to prevent any loss. The close was at the top. July at 48¾.

Selling of the July option by pit traders under the leadership of a prominent trader caused a decline in oats. July closed at 38½@38⅝.

The feature of trading in provisions was the selling of July lard by a leading packer. The market was poorly supported and in consequence the entire list showed a slight decline. July pork closed 10 cents lower, July lard and ribs each down 2½ cents.

The leading futures closed as follows:

PRIZE FOR DETECTIVES.

Thousand Dollar Offer of John D. Hooker Fresh Incentive to Local Sleuths.

Pinkerton detectives who have been working on the Hooker burglary case have had their zeal stirred by an advertisement in which Mr. Hooker offers a reward of $1000 for the lost articles.

The residence of John D. Hooker at No. 325 West Adams street was burglarized over two months ago by a thief, who entered the house at a time when all of the members of the family were at home, but his work was so smooth, that nothing was known of the deed until several hours later.

A lot of jewelry and valuable heirlooms were stolen. Pinkerton men and the detectives of the police department have worked continually on the case and a number of suspects have been examined, but the thief is still at large.

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Koll left last night for an extended Eastern trip that will include Chicago, New York and Washington. They will also visit Europe, visiting the exposition at St. Louis on their return.

Dr. P. J. Plenge of the University of Leipsic, Germany, is a visitor in Los Angeles. He is traveling through the United States, studying industrial conditions as bearing upon economic tendencies and results of trust combinations. His observations will be published on his return to Germany.

Rufus P. Jenning, executive officer of the California Promotion Committee, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday and is registered at the Van Nuys. While here he will participate in the sessions of the Executive Committee of El Camino Real Association, to which project he has given much of his time.

WALDECK OBSEQUIES.

With simple ceremony the remains of Jacob E. Waldeck will be laid to final rest in the Jewish cemetery this afternoon. At 2 o'clock there will be a short service at Mr. Waldeck's late residence on South Flower street, Rabbi Hecht making a brief address. The plans of the family do not include music in these ceremonies. The Theater Managers' Association will be represented, as will the Elks and the Masons, to which orders the deceased belonged. Beautiful floral offerings have already been sent. Friends of Mr. Waldeck will attend the service at the home, but the interment will be strictly private.

HENRY HEYWOOD DEAD.

A telegram was received at the local branch of Heywood Bros. and Wakefield Company yesterday announcing the death at Gardner, Mass., of Henry Heywood, president of the concern. The local house will be closed tomorrow.

HOT, ALL HOT!

A fish and tamale wagon at the corner of First and Los Angeles streets caught fire from a gasoline stove about 11 o'clock last night and drew a large crowd. The flames were extinguished by the proprietor, aided by bystanders, but not until the wagon and contents were practically ruined.

THIEF IN FLORENCE.

Rev. S. W. Carnes of Florence reported to the detectives yesterday that his residence had been broken into by burglars during the temporary absence of the family, and a rary absence of the family, and a number of articles of wearing apparel and jewelry were stolen.

George W. Parker, the San Francisco business man who was knocked down by an automobile at Kalamazoo, Mich., Friday, died yesterday as a result of the injuries sustained.

[illegible] One of the World's Master Printers.

[illegible]-millionaire and a Charitable Man.

[illegible] McNally, president of the [illegible] publishing concern of Rand, McNally & Co., died at 6:30 o'clock last [illegible] at his home in the foothills at [illegible]. The end came suddenly and [illegible] the culmination of an illness which [illegible] only last Thursday afternoon [illegible] he was in Los Angeles. He was [illegible] to his ranch at La Mirada on [illegible] day, and while at the California [illegible] sustained a slight chill. He returned to his home and Dr. Macomber [illegible] called. The physician diagnosed [illegible] as pneumonia.

[illegible] the patient was greatly [illegible]. He appeared to be almost [illegible] and was arranging for one of his [illegible] to leave last night for Chicago with her children and servants. [illegible] suddenly suffered a relapse and his [illegible] was summoned. The doctor [illegible] a nurse were with him when the [illegible]. It was unaccompanied by [illegible], and was without pain. [illegible] daughters and eleven of his [illegible] grandchildren were at the [illegible] when the final summons came.

A GREAT PRINTER.

[illegible] McNally was one of the [illegible] printers of the world. Considered [illegible] from the standpoint of a [illegible] the concern of which he was [illegible] is probably the largest printing [illegible] publishing house in the United [illegible] and is known wherever printed [illegible] is used. Beginning as an apprentice [illegible] in a small job office in [illegible] town in the north of Ireland, [illegible] his way through the various [illegible] of the printer's art, mastering [illegible], and from that humble beginning [illegible] up a business the volume [illegible] few persons realize. He had [illegible] all his life. Born about [illegible] years ago of humble parentage, [illegible] an apprenticeship, and before the War of the Rebellion he came [illegible] United States and entered the [illegible] & Co. of New York [illegible]. In the early sixties [illegible] Chicago and became the [illegible] the Tribune job office. A [illegible] he and William H. [illegible] the job department of [illegible] organized the firm of [illegible] Co. The earlier work [illegible] world-famous house was [illegible] printing and the [illegible] of various kinds, [illegible] expanded until the concern [illegible] a general publishing [illegible] most prominent books [illegible] Directory and the [illegible], publications consulted by the financiers of [illegible] countries.

[illegible] several years ago [illegible] in connection with the [illegible] concern is that although [illegible] business forty years or [illegible] original members and [illegible] heads of departments [illegible] until within the past [illegible] Mr. McNally, despite [illegible] remained the active head of [illegible] until the time of his death. [illegible] one of such magnitude [illegible] is done in departments, [illegible] knew what each department [illegible] doing, and his personal [illegible] wonderful business ability [illegible] of them.

[illegible] life Mr. McNally was [illegible]. All the members [illegible] family are living and [illegible] were at his home when [illegible] leaves, besides a widow, [illegible] G. McNally, vice-president [illegible] company, who is now on [illegible] from Chicago to California, [illegible] daughters, Mrs. Alex. Baldwin Naff and Mrs. Harry [illegible] and thirteen grandchildren. [illegible] brothers is in business in [illegible] another is an Episcopal [illegible] England, and three [illegible] reside in Ireland.

[illegible] OF SUNLAND.

[illegible] was a pioneer of the [illegible] which is now so numerous [illegible] prominent in Pasadena [illegible] neighboring cities of this [illegible] State, and throughout his [illegible] in this section he has [illegible] a firm believer in the [illegible] of Southern California [illegible] ever ready to assist any [illegible] industry which had for its [illegible] would result in benefit [illegible]. His charities were [illegible] were dispensed secretly [illegible] family never knowing [illegible] if his assistance was [illegible] charity he invariably [illegible] made his response con[illegible] the promise that his [illegible] disclosed under any circumstances.

[illegible] MILLION TREES.

[illegible] he has probably [illegible] of a greater number [illegible] in this part of the [illegible] other one person. On [illegible] properties—and his holdings [illegible]—there are now [illegible] than 400,000 trees, practically [illegible] which were planted by [illegible] same place at Altadena [illegible] of the most beautiful [illegible] place of beautiful [illegible] most important other [illegible] Windermere ranch at [illegible] Chicago he was identified [illegible] number of enterprises, [illegible] president, respectively, of [illegible] National Bank, the Equitable [illegible] Company, and the American [illegible] Publishing Company, [illegible] director in a large number [illegible]. He did not [illegible] wealth, but was many [illegible]. He once remarked [illegible] never purchased a piece [illegible] sold it without making [illegible] fraternal circles he [illegible] high in the councils of [illegible]. He was a member of [illegible] clubs of Chicago and [illegible] and was a member of [illegible] Club.

[illegible] can be communicated [illegible] arrangements for the funeral [illegible].

[illegible] a Good Sprinter.

[illegible] meeting occurred last [illegible] Pennsylvania station be[illegible] Louis, now of Clarksburg, [illegible] of the Confederate [illegible] old soldier who had [illegible] Federal side during the [illegible] seated in the smoking [illegible] for an outgoing train. [illegible] engaged they began to [illegible] soon bringing out [illegible] had served in Virginia [illegible] taking them to [illegible] places. After some minutes [illegible] made a remark about narrowly escaping capture by the northerners near Milwood, Va.

"Were you ever at a country home called 'Saratoga,' near Millwood?" asked the old Federal soldier.

"Yes," answered the other; "many a time."

"I was there once," continued the wearer of the blue. "One day I took my company to the front door of the house and called for the surrender of a young Confederate officer who was known to be hiding in the building somewhere. After a while we searched the house, but could find nobody. Presently one of my men discovered footprints leading through the dust of the back yard into the fresh earth of a newly-plowed corn field.

"Well, we gave that fellow a lively chase, I tell you. He didn't have much start, so we pressed him hard. It was the hottest day I ever felt, but we ran for that man like a hound after a rabbit. The worst of it was he got away. Never could explain it, but he certainly took to the woods in smooth fashion."

"Yes, it was hot that day," laughed the old Confederate. "I ought to know. I was the man you were chasing."

Then they shook hands and went over the run again.—[Washington Times.

Life on a Torpedo Boat.

Life aboard torpedo boats differs materially from that experienced aboard any other type of navy ships, says Ensign Robert L. Berry, U.S.N. When a torpedo boat is under way there is not much rest for the crew; their time is divided, half on, half off, duty. When steaming at high speed the vibration is so great that rest is almost impossible, the light shells of the vessels vibrating as if they must tear themselves apart. The United States navy has had no serious accidents to torpedo boats; but in the English navy two torpedo vessels, the Cobra and Viper, actually broke in two, not being strong enough to stand cruising at sea. The berthing arrangements aboard a destroyer are more comfortable than would be expected from the size of the vessel. Each man has a bunk of his own. The crew is berthed in several compartments, with from ten to twenty men in each of five living compartments. One man is detailed in each of these, whose duty it is to keep that compartment clean and to bring the food at meal times from the galley for the men at his mess; he also assists the ship's cook in preparing the food for cooking. Five dollars a month additional is allowed each of these men for the mess work.

For the hardships at sea allowance is made in port. Half the crew is allowed to go ashore each night, from 5 p.m. until 8 a.m. next day; and on Saturday the liberty is extended from noon until Monday at 8 a.m. For amusement on board the phonograph is the principal agent, while some members of the crew play on stringed instruments, adding much to the pleasure of their shipmates. Great interest is taken in baseball and football, and when at a navy yard where there are available grounds these games are played and encouraged. The food provided is of the best. The government allows 30 cents a day to feed each man in the navy.—[Leslie's Weekly.

Russian Servants.

The Russian servants will talk about fellow-servants, but never their employers. Even when they quit one place and take service in another family they would never mention anything about their former masters. This discretion goes so far that even the law considers it.

In most countries near relatives of accused persons are not expected to appear as witnesses against them; but in Russia the law also excludes servants as witnesses against their former or present employers, so long, at least, as these servants are not suspected of having taken part in the crime.

Psychologically this appears a wonderful thing, but it can be explained easily by the state of the social constriction of Russia. Though the servants are no more serfs, still the most ignorant woman who employs domestics, and has perhaps been one herself, never speaks to the servants unless to give an order; thus the familiarity that breeds contempt is excluded. A lady gossiping with her servants is an unknown thing.—[Good Housekeeping.

A Revolving Laundry.

A New York pawnbroker recently told me of a scheme resorted to by many washerwomen which may be of interest to those housewives who have noticed that their finer garments and household linens are slow in getting home from the wash. He says that these washerwomen make a regular practice of raising money on their patrons' better class of linen.

"For instance," said he, indicating a large package neatly done up, "that contains some very fine garments and a lot of household linen. The whole is worth perhaps $40. At any rate, I lent $20 on it. You see, the washerwoman takes the things home with her, washes them at once, and instead of returning them to their owner, brings them here and gets money, which she can use for at least a week, and sometimes much longer. By the time she has to take these out for delivery she has another lot which she can bring here in its place. Thus she keeps the money indefinitely. A washerwoman with a large number of such patrons can keep $200 or $300 in the air all the time, and still get the goods back home in time to satisfy those people who have sufficiently large reserve stock on hand."—[Brooklyn Eagle.

In the Journalistic School.

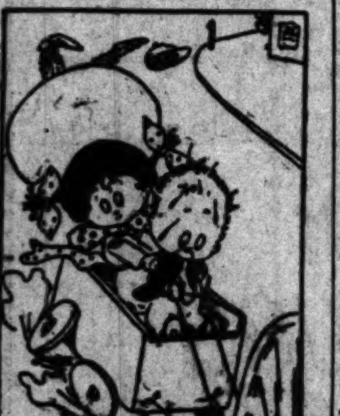
"Now," said the teacher of the third class in headlining, "what heading would you use if a lady's skirt should come unfastened from her waist on the street?"

A large hand shot up from that part of the middle seat occupied by an aspirant from the rural districts.

"Well, Reuben?" said the teacher.

"Wreck on the belt line," said Reuben, solemnly.

And the class was dismissed.—[Baltimore American.



SHE WAS SURPRISED.

Micky: My, Maggie, ain't we a-travelin'?

Maggie: Yes, I always heard you wuz fast, but I didn't think you wuz so rapid as dis.

SAN DIEGO.

POPULATION INCREASING.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, May 7.—A census of this city, just taken by a directory company, shows an estimated population of 37,000, an estimated increase of 10,000 since the Federal census of 1900. Names of tourists do not go into the register.

"MOODY CASTLE" BURNS.

"Moody Castle," one of the unique houses on Coronado Beach, has been destroyed by fire. Only one person was in the house at the time the flames started, and he escaped after being severely burned. The contents of the cottage, which was one of the landmarks on the beach, were lost. The cause of the fire is a mystery.

Brought Dingley Wealth.

J. H. Dingley of Coeur d'Alene has arrived in Missoula with $7000 in gold which he deposited in a local bank. Last year Dingley and a companion were hunting in Shoshone county when the former's dog jumped a bear which ran into a cave. Dingley crawled into the hole and killed the bear.

Inspection of the cave revealed that it was over the mouth of an old shaft, and in the shaft was the skeleton of a man, who had evidently been killed by a falling rock.

Dingley and his partner relocated the mine, and last week sold it to R. H. Kingsbury of Spokane for $14,000, Dingley receiving half for his share. He has the dog that chased the bear that was the means of his securing a stake. He will buy a home in Missoula.—[Minneapolis Times.

that is now best means of pre- destruction of along the side- companies, why not made by Prof. S. N. Woodbridge of South Pasadena, recently referred to on this page. In Bulletin No. 13 of the Academy of Sciences of Southern California, Prof. Woodbridge dealt with this question. He explains his proposition as follows:

"If small poles (say thirty-five feet high, at a cost of about $4.50 each, instead of poles sixty feet high, at a cost of about $14 each) were placed on each side of the street opposite each other and connected by cross wires in the same manner as trolley poles are now connected, and if on these cross wires were carried the electric light, power, telegraph and telephone wires, the same as trolley wires are now carried, the shade trees could be preserved and the hideous sight of big poles with their more hideous cross-bars avoided.

"Along city streets and country roads where trolley cars run, the companies operating should be compelled, for a consideration, to carry on their cross wires all other electric wires, thus saving a multiplicity of poles that disfigure our streets and roads."

A Reasonable Requirement.

Among the resolutions which the Board of Supervisors have recently adopted is the following:

"Resolved, that in the matter of offers for dedication of public streets and highways hereafter presented to this board, no map showing such offers will be considered, accepted, or indorsed, and no streets or highways so offered shall be accepted, unless the lines of the streets or highways so offered shall be a continuation of the lines of streets or highways of adjacent subdivisions, and the connections to the lines of the different subdivisions be plainly shown on the face of the map. That the County Surveyor be instructed to call the attention of the Board of Supervisors to any streets or highways offered for dedication which do not comply with this resolution."

The wisdom of adopting such a resolution requires no commendation. That there will be grave difficulties encountered in enforcing it is certain. That subterfuges innumerable will be resorted to for the purpose of getting the board to depart from the rule in the interests of special individuals, companies, or corporations is, also, undoubted. None of these things, however, should be permitted to have any weight with the board, and if the board shall be as well conducted in the future as it has been during the past few years, it is not believed that subterfuges and attempted evasions will have weight. Still there must of necessity be some discretion allowed in the enforcement of the rule. Cases might otherwise arise in which much needless hardships would be worked upon individual property owners. This discretion will necessarily rest with the board itself, and it is believed that the board, while seking to accomplish the general purposes for which the rule was adopted, will not permit a practical interpretation of its meaning which would be needlessly prejudicial to the rights of individual owners. As was suggested to the City Council in articles in this department concerning the acceptance of streets through subdivisions inside the city limits, the topographical features of the subdivision may in some cases suggest the desirability of bending boulevards and winding curves instead of thoroughfares based on undeviating right lines. Again a case might arise in which one of two adjacent subdivisions might contain streets not in conformity with the near-by streets of an incorporated municipality, which common discernment would tell the board must in time include such country subdivisions within its own limits. The board might then permit such modification of the rule as to allow the streets of the subdivision which seeks official recognition to be so laid out as to conform most nearly to conditions that would make the streets of the subdivision in time continuous thoroughfares with the streets of the near-by municipality.

As has previously been intimated, however, the board is to be commended for adopting a rule which, in effect, notifies parties seeking the benefits incident to a subdivision of their holdings that the rights of the public must be considered. In many cases the only thing which agents and owners seem to consider is "How many lots can I make my land yield up?" The idea that unnecessary and unsightly jogs should be avoided never seems to enter their minds. The City Council, in the case of subdivisions inside the incorporated cities, and the Board of Supervisors in the matters of subdivisions outside of the incorporated municipalities, should teach those persons that they have no inherent and inalienable right to subdivide their holdings in such manner as suits their own will and pleasure alone.

Those who seek to enjoy the advantages which result from a subdivision of their holdings, and who would have the City Council or the Board of Supervisors assume the care and custody of the streets passing through their subdivisions, should observe the reasonable requirements of the constituted authorities in matters pertaining to the course and direction that those streets should follow.

WIRE GLASS.

A PROTECTION AGAINST FIRE.

Owing to the recent disastrous fires in various parts of the country, the question of fireproof materials for buildings has been brought to the front. At a meeting of fire engineers, held in New York, about a year and a half ago, Edward F. Croker, chief of the fire department of New York, read a paper on wire-glass windows, of which he spoke very highly. In the course of his paper, he said:

"The fire which destroyed the Armour lard refinery, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, on the night of May 16, threatened for a time the entire district. Chief Musham was present, and he has stated that the wire glass in the windows of the several walls prevented any communication through them and demonstrated the ability of wire glass to prevent the spread of flame. The building destroyed was of recent construction, 100x400 feet, five stories in height, and subdivided into four sections by fire walls, two of which were completely destroyed.

"The quantity and nature of the material—refined lard—in combustion, resulted in the hottest kind of a fire, and its intensity and duration are hardly comprehensible. The chief tells me that the flames reached to a height of 150 feet above the roof, and the combustion was so perfect that scarcely any sparks were observed.

"I am quoting Chief Musham because I think, perhaps, his observation of wire glass in this instance was under a better condition than can be conceived for an actual service test of wire glass. The entire interior of the building was of inflammable construction, made more so by being saturated with lard and its five great floors were loaded with tons of this highly combustible product. Tanks containing thousands of gallons of renderings were exploded and their contents dashed against the walls and windows, and the intensity of the heat was so great that the walls holding the frames and sash which accommodated the glass crumbled, but until they fell the wire glass retained its place."

At a later meeting of the same association, held in Atlantic City, in September last, P. S. Stewart, formerly Superintendent of Buildings of New York, read a paper on "Fire Proof Construction," in the course of which, in referring to wire glass, he said:

"Wire glass is made either with a translucent or polished surface, and the wire reinforcement, imbedded in the glass itself, although keeping the window intact against the attack of a fire of almost any intensity, may be broken readily by the fireman when it becomes necessary to enter the building or introduce a fire stream. Among the recent important fires showing the efficiency of wire-glass windows in reducing the exposure hazard, may be cited the Armour lard refinery, Union Stock Yards Chicago; the Case plow works, in Racine, Wis., and the Mitchell wool warehouse, in Philadelphia. In each of these instances the spread of fire to very valuable properties standing but a few yards distant was prevented through the resistance offered by wire glass windows in the walls of the adjoining building."

If this material possesses so many good qualities as is claimed for it, it should come into more general use in business buildings.

AMONG OWNERS AND DEALERS.

REAL ESTATE MARKET CONTINUES FIRM AND HEALTHY.

Sales of Residence Properties in All Portions of the City Are Brisk. A Fair Share of Deals in Prospective Business Properties Are Noted and Seaside Lots Are Active.

A fair share of sales at satisfactory prices were noted during the week. There are few boom features noticeable save in the diminutive size of the lots in a few of the outside subdivisions that ought in justice to the investing public to be cut into nothing less than half-acre lots. The market remains firm and steady, with no trace of shrinkage in values noticeable. This is doubtless due to the fact that the outspoken denunciation of The Times and the hearty coöperation of the majority of the honest dealers therewith, have curbed and checked the tendency to "wash" and "water" sales, and has helped to prevent, in a great measure, the creation of artificial ideas of values, which almost always result in skyscraping prices that are bound to be followed by shrinkages. Desirable residence properties are to be had at reasonable prices and are selling readily. The demand for properties of this class is strong and shows no signs of weakening. All reports tending to create the opposite impression are without foundation. The investments in beach properties are heavier than usual at this time of the year, and the outlook for fairly active trading during the next few months is good. It may not be quite so brisk during the coming summer as it was last year, because Presidential years always seem to induce a certain amount of conservatism on the part of large investors. Many long-headed investors will be on hand, however, to pick up any piece of realty that looks much like a bargain, and, in addition to this, a fair amount of general trading can be expected.

A Handsome Home.

Among the deeds placed on record during the week was one conveying from the Los Angeles Trust Company to F. W. Braun lots 13 and 14, Chester Place. This is the completion of the deal begun some weeks ago, by which Mr. Braun arranged to purchase of D. L. Harding, through the agency of W. I. Hollingsworth & Co., the lots described, which aggregate 100x206 feet, on the southwest corner of Chester Place and Twenty-fifth street, with a sixteen-room two-story combination frame, granite and brick dwelling; consideration named, $35,000. A handsome home that is well worth the price quoted.

Sunnyside.

Tomorrow a free excursion is to run to Sunnyside by Grider & Hamilton, the agents of the tract. This tract comprises about 340 acres, lying about two miles south of the city limits, and fronting on Main and Figueroa streets and Vermont avenue. It is reached by the Traction road to San Pedro, and by the Gardena branch of the Los Angeles and Redondo Electric Railway. The tract is divided mostly into half-acre, acre and two-and-a-half-acre lots. A few smaller lots 66x150 feet, are reserved for business purposes. An abundant supply of water is piped under pressure to each lot. The land is productive, being now in grain and alfalfa. Town lots are to be offered at from $150 to $500. Acre lots at from $425 to $650, and two-and-a-half-acre lots at from $1000 to $1500 each. The prices quoted seem reasonable. Many selections have already been made, and the demand for this property will undoubtedly be considerable.

On Main Above Sixteenth.

A little sale of Main-street property that was noted toward the close of the week was that from J. M. Riley to Joseph Hyans, through the agencies of Lee A. McConnell & Co., and Nolan & Smith, of a lot 60x135 feet, unimproved, on the west side of street named, sixty feet north of Sixteenth street; consideration named, $12,000. This is at the rate of $200 per front foot for an inside lot only 135 feet deep. The figures clearly indicate the high esteem in which the future importance of this thoroughfare is held by investors.

At Ocean Park.

Among the purchases of Ocean Park property that are soon to be improved is that made by L. H. Mitchell from John R. Taylor of 108½x100½ feet, unimproved, on the northeast corner of Ocean Front and Hollister avenue; consideration named, $7000. Buyer will erect a three-story brick business building on the premises that will cost about $17,000.

Architects Marsh & Russell have prepared plans for a three-story brick and office building that is to be erected for Maier & Zobelein on a lot 23x94 feet, on the northeast corner of Ocean Front and Pier avenue. The contract has been awarded to J. F. Atkinson for $11,121, and work on the improvement will begin at once.

There are reports of improvements in the neighborhood of the clubhouse which seem to be well founded. If carried out a system of canals will be installed that, with the bridges, buildings and special features which will accompany it, will involve the expenditure of a considerable sum and mean something in the way of additional development at Ocean Park.

Preparing to Market.

L. G. Crenshaw, R. P. Smith and Nolan & Smith are subdividing, and will soon place on the market, through the firm named, fifteen acres lying between Pico and Sixteenth streets, and having the Nevin tract on the east and unimproved acreage on the west. It will cut into sixty-one lots averaging 60x177 feet. The streets are being graded, cement curbed and sidewalked by present owners, and the work is said to be well advanced. The lots will be offered at from $1800 upward. A building restriction will limit houses to dwellings costing at least $5000. The view from the tract is magnificent. The street-car service is all that could be reasonably desired, and the demand for the lots will undoubtedly be good.

Deal Closed.

The lot 40x60 feet, on the northeast corner of Main and Ninth streets, with two-story frame business building of small value, which was recently purchased of Amelia Lovell, guardian, by W. N. Hamaker; consideration named, $48,550, has been transferred to the Maier & Zobelein Brewery.

Actual Consideration in the Deed.

The records show the conveyance from the Nebraska and California Real Estate Company to P. A. Phillips of lots 1, 2 and part of lot 3, block 1, Miguel subdivision of Celis Vineyard tract; consideration named in deed, $26,000. This property is 120x150 feet, on the southeast corner of Main and Fifteenth streets, with frame dwelling of small value compared with lot, the sale of which was reported through the agency of Lee A. McConnell & Co., when bargain was struck; consideration named, same as that in deed. The advisability of giving full, actual consideration in deeds has been repeatedly referred to in these columns. The best interests of owners, as well as those of the public, are both served by this course, and it is to be hoped that its observance may in time become general.

Desirable Home.

John T. Rountree has purchased of George W. Stimson, 50x200 feet, to a twenty-foot alley, with a handsome new twelve-room two story frame dwelling, with basement and attic, at No. 331 Loma Drive; consideration named, $13,500. A desirable home, which the purchaser will occupy. View from dwelling is exceptionally fine.

At Tropico.

The sale of six unimproved lots in the Riverside Heights tract, at Tropico, is reported by Charles E. Shattuck, as made for Harrington Brown, as follows: To F. Blaine Russell, one, northeast corner Riverside Drive and Pacific avenue, $800; to George W. Retzer, Jr., who will build home on premises, one, southwest corner Riverside Drive and Pacific avenue, $800; to Mrs. Vernie Shuler, who will improve within the next few months, as an investment, one, northwest corner Riverside Drive and Columbus avenue, $850; to George C. Brigham, who will build home on property, one, west side Pacific avenue, 250 feet north of Riverside Drive, $900; to Colin Cable, who will also build home, two, west side Columbus avenue, 250 feet north of Riverside Drive, $1800. The lots are 169x250 feet each, and water for irrigation and domestic uses is piped to them under pressure. The tract is about five miles north of the city hall, and is reached by the new interurban line to Glendale.

Orange Orchard.

George S. Smith buys of L. R. Please, through Nolan & Smith, ten acres in twelve-year-old Washington navel and Valencia oranges, without improvements in way of buildings, on the south side of D street, one-quarter mile west of Euclyd avenue, Ontario; consideration named, $5000.

On Olive Heights.

George H. Rector buys of Elizabeth Y. Gordon, through the Whitcomb-Gibson Company, 60x145 feet, on the west side of Grand avenue, between Second and Third street, and extending west to Bunker Hill avenue, with a two-story frame dwelling on the Grand-avenue frontage, and a double frame cottage on the Bunker Hill side of the lot; consideration named, about $14,000. The firm named reports a growing demand for Olive Heights properties, and states that this is the third sale that it has closed in that locality during the past ten days.

Seventh and Bonnie Brae.

E. A. Forrester & Sons sell to I. N. Van Nuys, through W. I. Hollingsworth & Co., 150x140 feet, unimproved, on the northwest corner of Seventh and Bonnie Brae streets; consideration named, $13,000.

Walnut Ranch.

W. E. Dowdle buys of George Metcalf, for a home, through Service Bros., nineteen acres two miles northeast of El Monte, with good ranch buildings, land set to walnuts; consideration named, $6500.

BY BUILDERS AND ARCHITECTS.

MUSIC OF SAW AND HAMMER STILL ABOUNDS.

Buildings Begun and Completed in Various Parts of the City—A Slight Increase in Operations Planned for This Field Continues to be Shown by the Records.

The number of buildings completed during the week was as follows:

First Ward	6
Second Ward	4
Third Ward	5
Fourth Ward	10
Fifth Ward	13
Sixth Ward	26
Seventh Ward	6
Ninth Ward	9

Of these seventy-one were dwellings and eight business buildings.

The number of buildings begun was ninety-seven, ten of them being business buildings and the remainder dwellings, distributed as follows:

First Ward	8
Second Ward	9
Third Ward	8
Fourth Ward	11
Fifth Ward	10
Sixth Ward	33
Seventh Ward	5
Eighth Ward	1
Ninth Ward	12

Operations in the building line continue to maintain the condition of activity which is now coming to be considered as simply normal, although it is, in fact, very much above the average for a city of this size.

Last week Building Superintendent Krause issued 123 permits, for improvements amounting to $181,719, divided as follows:

Ward.	Number permits.	Valuations.
First	13	$7,000
Second	11	13,825
Third	9	20,944
Fourth	12	41,050

Huntington Building.

A sketch will be found elsewhere in this review which shows the Main-street frontage of the Huntington Building that is now under construction on the southeast corner of Main and Sixth streets. It is a nine-story brick, iron and steel structure, which fronts 211 feet on Main street, 285 feet on Sixth street, and 211 feet on Los Angeles street. When finished it will be as nearly fireproof as a building can be made. It will have an available floor space of something over twelve acres. It will have a greater floor space than any other office building west of Chicago, and it will only be exceeded in this respect by some of the larger department stores of the large cities of the East and Middle West. As an instance of comparison the Masonic Temple at Chicago, which is one of the noted office buildings of that city, has less floor space than the Huntington Building, because, while the Temple is twenty stories and 273 feet high, it is only about 100x100 feet in its exterior dimensions. The building which is occupied by the Lacey Department Store at Chicago is one of the larger structures of the kind in that city, and its available floor space is estimated at about twenty-three acres, which is less than double the corresponding space in the Huntington Block. Comparisons could be multiplied, but the instances cited will serve to give a better idea of the relative size of the building now under construction on Main and Sixth streets, perhaps, than a multiplicity of figures. It is being put up under the supervision of Architect Thornton Fitzhugh, and will cost over a million dollars. The two upper floors of the building will be occupied by the Johnathan Club. The seven lower floors will be principally for the use of the Pacific Electric Railway Company, and other related and affiliated companies of which Mr. Huntington is the principal stockholder. There will be six hundred offices in the building above the first floor. Some of these will probably be rented for a time to interests other than railroads controlled by Mr. Huntington. In the first six floors above the first floor there are two light and air spaces 40x140 feet each. In the floors above that the corresponding space aggregates 160x140 feet.

Two hundred and fifty miles of horizontal wiring were required for installing each of the two telephone systems to be employed in the building. Eighteen miles of plumbing pipes are used, and the materials used in the heating and lighting appliances are on an equally stupendous scale.

Work on the building is being pushed with all reasonable dispatch, and the frontage shown, while not giving an adequate idea of the colossal proportions of the building, indicates that the time when it will be ready for occupancy is approaching. The improvement is of that substantial character that corresponds with the city's growth and prospects.

For Fourth and Hill Streets.

Mrs. R. S. Saunders and co-heirs have ordered of Architect A. L. Haley, plans for a three-story brick business building which they propose erecting on the northwest corner of Fourth and Hill streets. It will have four stores on the first floor and fifty rooms for a family hotel on the upper floors; and it will cost about $35,000. The walls will be made strong enough for three additional stories. Plans are to be ready for bids in about ten days, and it is hoped to have the house ready for occupancy by November 1.

Hotel and Dwelling.

Among the pictures to be found on the first page of this review is a sketch of the Hotel Ascot. It is being erected on the northwest corner of Central avenue and Fifty-sixth street by C. M. Graves for Miss Lida J. Fountain, and it is a sixty-room three-story frame structure that will cost about $20,000. In addition to the guests' rooms, a parlor, hotel office, barber shop, lobby, dining-room, kitchen and other rooms needed in a first-class hotel are provided. The house is to be heated throughout by gas, lighted by electricity, and supplied with modern conveniences generally. Its furnishings and equipment are to be of the latest modern patterns. Arrangements have been made for opening the house as a hotel about October 1, which is about the time that the fall racing season begins. It is located within two blocks of Ascot Park, and the same distance from the new street car barns of the Los Angeles Railway Company, and it is thought that its location and surroundings are sufficiently favorable to justify the making of improvements of this character at a point so far from the business center of the city as the new hotel will be.

Another sketch shown in this group is that of a new eight-room two-story frame dwelling that stands on the south side of Twelfth street, 115 feet east of Alvarado street. It is No. 2024 West Twelfth street. The house is provided with a basement and attic, and supplied with modern conveniences, and it is a very pretty specimen of the moderate priced modern homes that are now being built in this city. The dwelling, with lot 42x105 feet, was purchased in the latter part of the week by Mrs. M. Mendelson from Lewis C. Carlisle, through the agency of Althouse Bros.; consideration named, $6500, and it will be occupied as a home by the buyer. The wide projecting eaves, and gable lines of different lengths, gives the house a pleasing exterior. The interior is handsomely finished in Oregon pine—stained, and the floors are of oak and maple.

In the Magazine.

In the House Beautiful and Architectural Department of The Times' Weekly Illustrated Magazine, of this date, is shown a sketch, together with court garden and first floor plan, of the handsome two-story cement and plaster residence that is to be erected for E. T. Perkins, on a lot of the Nevin tract, located on the west side of Gramercy Place, about 74 feet south of Dorchester street. It is to be put up under the supervision of M. Paul Martin and N. D. Barker, associated architects. A description of the dwelling, which is a very pretty specimen of Mission architecture, is furnished by Architect M. Paul Martin, and gives valuable suggestions concerning matters to be considered in erecting dwellings of this class.

Building Notes.

Architects Morgan & Walls have prepared plans for a single-story brick warehouse that is to be put up for John Webber on the north side of San Fernando street near the junction of Main. It will be 120x120 feet and will be provided with switch and storage facilities and similar conveniences.

Architect A. L. Haley has prepared for Josephine R. and D. W. Stewart, plans for a three-story frame business and apartment building, with roof garden and sun parlor, which is to be erected on the northwest corner of Flower and Third streets. It will be 55x120 feet, will have three stores on the first floor, and twenty-six two and three-room flats on the upper floors, and will cost about $25,000. The principal contract has been awarded to Martin and Balwin.

The Architect last named left yesterday on the Owl for a short business trip to San Francisco in connection with plans of an athletic club, which local business men are said to intend erecting here.

E. S. Williamson has taken the contract to erect for Mrs. Josephine Hall two bungalow dwellings on the west side of Hermosa street, about three hundred feet south of Prospect avenue. They will cost $3800, and are to be finished by July 15. The houses will have beamed ceilings, oaken floors, brick mantels and modern conveniences generally.

C. Wiesner is to build for H. Clay Walker a five-room frame cottage on the southwest corner of Twentieth and Hooper streets. It will be of modern design and finish and is to be ready for occupancy by June 15.

Architects Dennis & Farwell have prepared plans for a nine-room two-story frame dwelling that is to be put up for Harry Gordon, on the west side of Southerland avenue, between La Vista and Franklin avenues, Hollywood. Its interior finish will be in slash-grained Oregon pine, with red brick floors, and the house will cost something over $4000.

Following plans of new buildings are taken from the Builder and Contractor:

Architect A. B. Benton has taken bids for a two-story and attic frame residence to be built on Western avenue near Sixteenth street for Prof. Greenville C. Emery. It will contain fourteen rooms and have cove ceilings, plate and art-glass windows, brick mantels and fireplaces, beamed ceilings, hardwood floors, slashed grained yellow pine finish, brick foundation and modern features.

He is also preparing plans for John T. Gaffey of a seven-room cottage to be built at San Pedro.

He is also preparing plans of a two-story frame building to contain four six-room flats to be built on Winfield street, near Georgia street, for John W. Barr. It will have brick foundation, rustic exterior and shingle roofing. The interior will have Oregon pine trim, electric wiring, fuel gas and modern features.

Architect F. M. Tyler has prepared plans for James Staggers of a five-room frame bungalow to be built on the corner of Third and Cummings streets.

He has also prepared plans of a two-story eight-room frame residence to be built on the corner of Bonito and Michigan avenues. It will have a brick foundation, rustic siding, leaded glass windows and shingle roofing. Yellow pine will be used for the interior decoration, cove ceilings, tinted walls, gas and electric fixtures and other modern features are provided.

Architect John Parkinson has prepared plans for a three-story and basement store and office building to be erected on the west side of Hill street between Sixth and Seventh streets, for the Hill Street Building Company.

He has also prepared plans for the second story to the building now under construction at the southeast corner of Seventh and Spring streets. This will insure the erection of a two-story and basement building 110x165 feet, containing nine storerooms and thirty-six offices.

Architect G. E. Voelkel is taking bids for a two-story frame building, containing four flas to be erected on Maple avenue, near Eleventh street, for William Attoen. Specifications provide for a brick foundation, rustic siding, leaded glass windows, staff decorations, shingle roofing, cove ceilings, white cedar and slash-grain Oregon pine finish and other modern features.

Architect Fred R. Dorn has prepared plans for a two-story frame building 32x60 feet. It will have two apartments of five and six rooms, and it is to be built in Long Beach for William Miller.

Architect S. Tilden Norton has prepared plans for the alteration of the residence of C. Holle at No. 636 West Sixteenth street. It will be remodeled to contain two flats of six and seven rooms.

Architect J. Cather Newsom is taking bids for a four-story frame apartment-house 44x60 feet, to be built on the corner of Fourth street and Bunker Hill avenue, for Mrs. Elizabeth Oliver. It will contain thirty-five rooms and the necessary conveniences.

OTHER SALES AND NOTES.

Other sales, some of which have already been reported in The Times, include the following:

C. A. Judd to S. W. Price, 41x165 feet, with seventy-two-room frame and cement apartment building, No. 344 South Grand avenue; consideration estimated, $32,000. Desirable property.

Mrs. J. L. Kleinpeter to Mrs. John A. Gordon, through the Whitcomb-Gibson company, 60x165 feet, west side Grand avenue, 120 feet south of Third street, and extending westward to Bunker Hill avenue, with frame cottage on Bunker Hill frontage; consideration named, $12,650. Buyer is said to intend improving Grand avenue frontage.

Palm Place Company to Mrs. N. S. Wartelle, through Althouse Bros., 50x207 feet, east side Alvarado street, 150 feet south of Twelfth street, unimproved; consideration named, $3000. Buyer will build $10,000 residence on property.

S. Granas to Frieda Joseph, 25x60 feet north side Sixth, between Hope and Flower streets, with small frame business building; consideration named, $6000.

Mrs. E. J. Duncan to J. Arentz, through P. J. McGarry & Co., 60x150 feet, southwest corner Twelfth and Santee streets, with two frame cottages of small value; consideration named, $6500.

F. H. Manger to Ella B. Squires, as shown by records, part of lots 49, 50 and 51, West End Terrace tract; lot is 50x150 feet, east side Rampart street, ninety feet south of Seventh street, with substantial dwelling; consideration named, $8000.

John Z. Dumpert to Mrs. Jennie Frankenfield, 50x150 feet, west side Lovelace avenue, about 250 feet south of Washington street, with eight-room frame dwelling; consideration named, $4250. For a home.

Ensley L. Potter to Alice M. Gaer, 50x122 feet, south side Eleventh street, 100 feet east of Union avenue, with frame cottage dwelling; consideration named, $4000.

Real Estate Notes.

Fred Gourley buys of C. W. Wilson, through Croake & McCann, an unimproved lot, 50x125 feet, on the south side of Girard street, between Union and Burlington avenues; consideration named, $1200, and will erect a substantial frame dwelling on the premises as an investment.

M. B. Miller has purchased of Charles W. Bassett, through Service Bros., five acres, one-half mile east of Gardena, without buildings, planted in alfalfa; consideration named, $1000. Edwin Morris buys of same grantor, through same firm, seven acres just east of land last described; without buildings, planted in alfalfa; consideration named, $1225.

Leo J. Maguire reports the sale of nine unimproved lots in La Paloma tract, near Hollywood, averaging 50x150 feet each, at $450 apiece. Among the buyers reported are: C. J. Adams, W. C. Hall, C. J. Kubach, J. Ross, C. P. Squires and W. C. Burnham.

A little sale reported by the Bulletin real estate firm tends to show that desirable dwellings find ready buyers when listed at fair prices with live agents. D. C. Cline, it seems from the report, listed his home place, a six-room frame cottage, No. 839 East Thirty-first street, on a lot 40x150 feet, with the firm named, one day last week at 2:30 p.m. At 3 p.m. J. H. Underhill called to inquire about houses, was shown the property described, and at 4 p.m. purchase money was deposited and certificate ordered; consideration named, $2500. The price quoted shows an advance on former prices, and it is probably a fair bargain to the buyer of this modest little home, but it was not a sacrifice sale or a "snap."

The Henry P. Barbour Company reports the sale of a lot of the Nevil's tract, at San Pedro, 45x122½ feet, on the west side of Mass street, just north of the United States government reserve, and adjoining the Southern Pacific tract, unimproved, to William Thienif, a San Pedro business man; consideration named, $1350. A desirable lot that is probably bought for improvement.

DIGNITY CUR-TAILED.

Self-Respecting Dog and His Indignant Owner Cause Walk-out of Maine Dog Tail Biters.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

MEDDYBEMPS (Me.) April 30.—The Spittoon Tenders' Union of this city is in a heap of trouble. Two months ago its members went on strike for a six-hour work day and recognition of the union. The Dog Tail Biters' Union had promised its financial aid and moral support, but was unable to give it, as that powerful labor organization, it seems, has troubles of its own.

Less than a week after the spittoon tenders went on strike, the dog tail biters resolved on a five-hour work day, 50 per cent. increase in wages, recognition of the union, a Saturday whole holiday (double pay while out,) and the union label pasted on all dogs deprived of their caudal appendages.

The bosses were willing to concede all demands, but owners of dogs kicked at the union label clause. This made trouble. The owner of a prize-winning Boston terrier objected to his dog wearing a foot-square label reading:

> This certifies that the tail of this dog was bitten off by a member in good standing of Dog Tail Biters' Union, Local No. 47, Amalgamated Dog Tail Biters' Union of America.

The owner said his dog had a self-conscious air of degradation while wearing this label that was truly depressing; that while once it was a very proud dog and received the caresses of society ladies, it now hung its head in shame and seemed no longer the same dog. The poor terrier stood it for a while, and then tried suicide to end its woes. Its owner appeared just in the nick of time and saved the dog's life. Suspecting the cause, he indignantly tore the label from the dog's back.

The walking delegate of Dog Tail Biters' Union, Local No. 47, Amalgamated Dog Tail Biters' Union of America, saw the act. He immediately called its members together and declared a strike.

They have now been out seven weeks and there appears no sign of weakening in the strikers' ranks. "We have $140 in our treasury, and will stand out for our rights to the bitter end—a hundred years, if need be," said the secretary-treasurer of Dog Tail Biters' Union, Local No. 47, Amalgamated Dog Tail Biters' Union of America.

The English Vocabulary.

The ordinary English vocabulary may be said to contain from 30,000 to 50,000 words, the latter estimate being large. Shakespeare, whose vocabulary is larger than that of any other English poet, unless it be Browning, used about 15,000 words, while Milton, whose range was narrower, employed only about half that number. The common estimate of the average vocabulary of educated people is from 5000 to 6000, but in this case the number of words which are known but not used is enormously increased. A well-read college graduate should be familiar with perhaps 100,000 words, while in the course of a year he might not use 5000 of them in his writing or conversation. Shorthand reporters find about 2500 word-signs and contractions ample for representing the words which are commonly used in public speaking.—[Springfield Republican.

FOR SALE—
I am a man of small family; a few years ago my family of 6, well grown wanted me to build a nice home in the southwest part of the city and as a kind, indulgent father I did it. Then all of a sudden the most of them got married and left me and the house is too large, for what is left, there being 12 rooms, 6 bedrooms, besides one in the barn; 65-foot lot, east front, plate-glass front windows, cistern, furnace, cellar and garret; all floored; large enough for 4 or 5 more rooms, laundry, front and back stairs, hot and cold water, two toilets, porcelain bath, gas and electricity in house and barn; I want to sell it at once; will give possession right away. Fools build fine houses and wise men live in them. This is too true in my case, and a party contemplating building will find it to be to his advantage to see me personally. FOR SALE—LOTS IN ALVARADO PARK the beauty spot. Come out and view the broad Pacific—the "meadows green," the "hoary-headed mountains," the "hills, rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun—the vales stretching in pensive quietness between." We recently sold two choice lots in this tract for $850 each; when the deed was delivered to the buyer he remarked, "You couldn't buy those two lots back from me this minute for $1000 apiece." He was right; he bought for a home and we do not know where we could duplicate two such lots in any other tract in this city for $1000.
REMEMBER, Alvarado Park is about same distance from center as Westlake Park and surpasses Westlake in natural beauty.
REMEMBER, Alvarado Park lots are full sized and are protected by suitable building restrictions.
REMEMBER, Alvarado Park is above the fog, the dust and the smoke; warmer in winter and cooler in summer than other parts of the city.
REMEMBER, Alvarado Park is near the junction of two magnificent boulevards (Sunset on the south and Brand on the east,) and is easily accessible to two car lines.
REMEMBER, above all, the prices are from $625 to $800—the cheapest, desirable, close-in property in this city today. We will make the terms satisfactory—any way to please you—will accept a small payment down and monthly payments thereafter.

SCHENCK, TATUM & SCHENCK.

DID YOU EVER CONSIDER THE PROPOSITION OF BUYING A NICE, LARGE CORNER LOT AND PUTTING A HOME FOR YOURSELF ON ONE FRONTAGE AND A COTTAGE FOR RENT ON THE OTHER?

We have a fine corner lot on high ground, ONE BLOCK FROM WESTLAKE PARK, which has great possibilities along this line. WE CAN SELL THIS THIS WEEK FOR ONLY $2500.

The lot above is one of the most beautiful lots in this city for twice the amount.

We have another fine lot WITH TWO FRONTAGES, high ground, wide street and beautiful location. Only $1700.

If you want the best lot, either in WESTLAKE DISTRICT, SOUTH or SOUTHWEST, and are willing to pay $150 per foot, we have a hundred feet in each of the above districts which can't be equaled.

We have a two-hundred foot corner in the most commanding part of the city for $15,000. There is a fine modern house on this lot worth $5000, but you can tear it down if it don't suit. The lot is worth nearly the price, and the house is a beauty.

FOR SALE—COUNTRY PROPERTY; TIMBER land. I am in a position to furnish investors large or small tracts of patented timber land in one of the best timber belts in the State of Washington, at very low prices; these claims will scale from three to ten million feet each. They were patented by poor people who are willing to turn them into cash. I have lived among these people for fifteen years, known them well and am in a position to buy their lands much cheaper than an outsider; two railroads are now being built to tap this rich timber belt, and when completed these claims will certainly advance in value several hundred per cent. over present prices. Correspondence solicited.

FOR SALE—GLENDALE AND TROPICO.

We are headquarters for this property; I have sold more acres there in the last ten years than all other agents; 15 years' residence; know the land and know the owner, and sold the electric railroad their lands and knew from start to finish that Mr. H. E. Huntington, the king of electric railroads, was going to build the Glendale Electric Railroad and that it was going to be the most scenic route anywhere around Los Angeles. While others were doubting I was getting hold of all the acres that could be had; in this lovely valley we have 700 acres that we can sell per acre just about what some agents are peddling 50-foot lots; this acreage was secured by us one year ago, when prices were different; our lands carry 2 shares of Verdugo Canyon water per acre, while they sell you water at meter rates on 50x150-foot lots; it will cost you nothing to come to our office and take an automobile ride and see for yourself; why pay for lots, when we can sell you acres; buy acres of us and sell lots and you will make the money the lot agents and owners are making; you can see we sold 40 acres of this lovely foothill lands this week; this land is going and when we sell off this tract that was secured one year ago, you will pay double the price it will cost you now. If you or any of your friends have any, come and let us take you an automobile ride to the Glendale foothills and you will see for yourself you will be able to breathe better at once. We know what this foothill climate is after 17 years experience in this lovely climate. R. G. DOYLE CO., 501 Frost Bldg., 145 S. Broadway. 8

Redondo realty at present prices offers better inducements and more certain returns. Read the following:

"Here is a more marked instance of increased realty values in Redondo: One year ago Nick Guerovitch bought lot 1 of the Ocean View subdivision for $750. Last week Edward D. Silent & Co., for a client, offered him $2500 for the same lot, and the offer was declined. Guerovitch is now building on the premises a three-story, forty-room apartment-house."—Los Angeles Examiner, April 21, 1904.

SAN PEDRO.
HER FUTURE DEVELOPMENT.

So much has been and is being said of the Harbor of San Pedro as a commercial center one is apt to overlook the really delightful situation of the city as a residence site. Keep this in mind, as well as the advantage of the harbor; in speaking of the probable future development of the deep-sea commerce of the country, we are aware of the great and almost immeasurable importance of San Pedro as a harbor, not only to Los Angeles, nor even California, but indeed for the whole United States. Asiatic trade has hitherto naturally gone to San Francisco as the port of our western coast. Our government, however, realizes the high national importance of San Pedro as a deep-water harbor, and is now fast preparing this port for the reception of oriental commerce, and for the prospective great traffic which natural advantages will give San Pedro upon the completion of the Nicaraguan Canal. It is bound to be the door that leads to the Orient, shipping and receiving vast cargoes of home and foreign products.

In the past few days many visitors have been in this harbor city, and have been investing much money; we have been given authentically the information that capitalists were in town this week for the sole purpose of procuring a site to erect a handsome and much-needed hotel; this fine structure will be built at a cost of $50,000. There will also be a new water plant, for which $150,000 will be spent.

The firm of McDermott & Quinn, whose office is in the Griffin Block, will be more than pleased to show you good buys, and gladly give you any information regarding San Pedro; these gentlemen are courteous and reliable to deal with. Remember to give them a call. 8

SANTA MONICA.
DESIRABLE PLACE TO LIVE.

Although nature has been so lavish in her endowments to Santa Monica, yet the people have not been idle. Art has supplemented the natural advantages to a very remarkable degree; some years ago bonds were voted for a splendid Waring system of sewerage, which is unsurpassed anywhere. The water is abundant and pure, coming from springs and artesian wells several miles from town. The city is wonderfully well laid out with alley in every block, which contains all the wires and pipes, so that the streets are never torn up as in most places. Many men live in Santa Monica, and have their business in Los Angeles, because living expenses are low, rents more reasonable, while, in addition, they have all the advantages of a city.

It used to be said that it was difficult to find enough cottages in Santa Monica, and the people have been making an earnest effort not to deserve this reproach. There have been built many new and desirable cottages in the past few months, and they can be bought on the installment plan, which means much to many people who want a home of their own, yet are not able to pay cash down.

Have you ever called on W. T. Gillis, one of the leading real estate men of Santa Monica? If not, do so, for he has some fine property and acreage that is a good investment. You will find Mr. Gillis a well-informed business man and what he tells you you can safely rely upon. 8

OCEAN PARK.
AND HER GRANDEURS.

The history and growth of Ocean Park is the most remarkable of any seaside city, and its wonderful progress is to be explained by its superb locality, its delightful environs, the splendid conveniences with which the expenditure of so much capital has equipped it; the very unique plan in which it is laid out differs from that of any seaside city in the world. A gorgeous panorama of earth, sky, sea and mountains; in the distance to the north the blue and purple Santa Monica Mountains rise in gorgeous silhouette and extend around the long winding arm of the bay; to the south one sees precipitous bluffs, while low-lying Catalina rises on the horizon. The city is built upon a great level stretch of clean, white sand; which follows the ocean for thousands of feet, and extends inland for from 700 to 2000 feet on a plane which rises from six feet at the beach to twenty feet or more at the electric roads and the railroads. Then come imposing hills, which command a sweeping view of the sea. There is nothing to mar the pleasing harmony of the long boulevards lined, as they are, with broad promenades. The first dwellings built at Ocean Park are constantly being replaced with fine, modern dwellings.

The Ocean Park Bank, of which Mr. T. H. Dudley is president, is one of the stable banks of Southern California. Every attention is given to their depositors.

If you have not opened an account with them, do so at once. They give you the assurance that all interests entrusted to their care will be safeguarded. 8

Quack Music Teachers.

"Ninety-five per cent. of all vocal teachers are quacks," said an old musician. Few singers would doubt the assertion. Probably in no other kind of work can a man who knows practically nothing about a subject do so quickly a lucrative amount of teaching. There are many common types: the piano teacher who cannot get enough pupils to make a living, the broken-down old-time singer, the derelict of the concert halls, who never could sing himself, but who now gives fifty or more lessons a week at from $3 to $5 each, and many more. Their half-hour lessons may be said to consist one-third of chat and gossip, one-third of scales and exercises and one-third of the singing of the pupil's favorite songs, all interspersed with just enough commendation and criticism to keep the pupil's good opinion of both herself and of her teacher. There are teachers who make their pupils sing at a brass-headed tack in the wall, and there are others whose training has not only ruined voices, but temporarily harmed general health as well. Over against these charlatans of the profession there are conscientious men and women who can detect faults in a voice and know how to correct them, who are a constant inspiration to the student's musicianship, and who work carefully and enthusiastically for each individual pupil.

It is not easy to tell the good teacher from the quack, and you will find bitter early experiences in many a successful singer's career.—[Leslie's Monthly.

A Picturesque Revenge.

A Japanese woman, when abandoned by her lover, according to the Amritsar Bazar, takes a peculiar and picturesque revenge. When she no longer has any doubt as to his faithfulness she gets up in the middle of the night and puts on a pleasing dress and wooden sandals. Attached to her headdress she carries three lighted candles, and suspended to her neck hangs a small mirror. She takes in her left hand a small straw effigy of the faithless one, and in her right a hammer and nails. Walking gravely to the sanctuary she selects one of the sacred trees and nails the effigy securely to the trunk. She then prays for the death of the traitor, vowing that if her wish is granted she will take out the nails which trouble her god, since it is fastened to a sacred tree. Night after night she comes to the tree, adding one or two nails and repeating her prayers, persuaded that the god will not hesitate to sacrifice the man to save the tree.—[Amritsar Bazar.

Long Beach
SEASIDE PARK

Ocean Front Lots Only $450 to $1000

Seaside Park is not a suburb of Long Beach. It is right in that thriving city. Seaside Park offers absolutely the only sites for seaside homes in Long Beach, for a moderate amount of money. Seaside Park is located directly on the ocean front, where a clean beach of white sand stretches away into the surf, making the most ideal bathing beach in Southern California.

SEASIDE PARK

Seaside Park Property Is Property for Profit.

You know what wonderful progress is being made in the thriving city of Long Beach. People who invested there one and two years ago have seen their property double and treble in value. Those who bought ocean front property at Ocean Park and other beaches, have reaped rich rewards for their foresight. Seaside Park promises the same kind of profits for present investors. It is right in line of the building trend of Long Beach.

Unequaled for Seaside Homes.

Not in all of Southern California is there a finer piece of beach property than Seaside Park. Nowhere is there a more superb site for a pleasant home. Sheltered surf for bathing, and a still water lake offering all the pleasures of boating. Numerous handsome residences already erected, and an unobstructed view of the famous Yacht Club Course afford all advantages of pleasant surroundings and enjoyable sightseeing.

Seaside Park Accessible Pier and Pavilion.

Seaside Park is located just west of the immense Pleasure Pier, Pavilion and Bath house. A broad walk along the beach makes a pleasant promenade between the two points. Go down today and you will see thousands enjoying it. The Long Beach electric cars run right through to Seaside Park, which can be reached from this city in forty-five minutes. At Seaside Park there is gas and electricity and the water supply is from the famous Bouton Artesian Wells. A Septical sewer system makes it assuredly sanitary.

Huntington's Pacific Electric Railway

runs along the entire north line of the Seaside Park property. Heretofore the terminal of this line has been at Golden Avenue, Long Beach. It was necessary to transfer to the branch road running to Seaside Park. This week the terminal of the Los Angeles-Long Beach line of the Pacific Electric will be permanently removed to Seaside Park. You can then ride from Sixth and Main, Los Angeles, to Seaside Park without transferring. The Pacific Electric is conceded to be the finest electric railroad in the United States. Trains run every ten minutes and the service is vastly superior, and faster, to that of any other Los Angeles line running to any of the beach towns. With a through ten-minute train service between Seaside Park and Los Angeles the value of this property will unquestionably rise immediately and rapidly.

TO CELEBRATE AT HOLLYWOOD.

DEMONSTRATION ON ACCOUNT OF BOULEVARDS.

Main Jubilation to be at the "Outpost," Which Has Been Secured for the Purpose—Automobile and Carriage Parade a Feature—Parlor Trolley Cars to Convey Visitors.

Citizens of Hollywood, persons dwelling in the northwestern part of Los Angeles and others interested are preparing to celebrate next Saturday the approaching completion of a system of boulevards extending to and through that foothill city.

The main demonstration will be at the "Outpost," Hollywood, which has been secured for the purpose. Here a light lunch will be served and a programme of speeches by prominent officials and those interested in the boulevard work will be presented. It is planned to have a parade of carriages, automobiles, coaches and tally-hos to leave the city soon after noon, followed early in the afternoon by special cars along the line of Sunset and Prospect boulevards, affording to all an opportunity to inspect these magnificent roads with the heavy cuts and fills made necessary by the route adopted, which is almost a direct line between Hollywood and Los Angeles. The parade will be enlivened by music.

The Los Angeles-Pacific Railway Company will furnish the parlor cars "Mermaid" and "400" for the use of city and county officials and prominent men of this city and neighboring towns and their ladies. A number of other special cars will also run. The committee having the matter in charge especially invite their friends owning carriages, automobiles or coaches to participate in the parade and take guests with them.

The celebration will be under the auspices of the Hollywood Board of Trade, the Sunset Boulevard Improvement Association and H. J. Whitley. Every one interested is invited to participate. Notice will be given later where tickets can be secured.

This will be an opportunity to drivers and automobilists to inspect the best and most complete system of boulevards in Southern California. Sunset boulevard, which is nearing completion, is a splendid thoroughfare through the hills in the northwest part of the city and affords an outlet to a picturesque part of town and suburbs heretofore practically inaccessible. In and about Hollywood has been built a system of hill drives with easy grades, which afford access to the commanding heights in the background and many miles of other boulevards built and under construction.

The contract for the part of Sunset boulevard through the city amounts to over $100,000, and the total cost of boulevards in and around Hollywood and leading to Los Angeles, including the double-tracking of the electric line, is estimated at about $250,000,000.

JEWEL THIEF.

Jeweler Von Breton Catches a Man Who Substitutes Bogus Stone for Gem.

A jeweler grabbed a thief by the throat in a doorway on South Broadway yesterday morning, recovered a $350 diamond he had just appropriated, and landed him safely in the hands of an officer.

A well-dressed man of about middle age entered the jewelry store of Johann Von Breton, No. 350 South Broadway, and asked to be shown diamond rings. Mr. Von Breton's sister waited on the prospective customer. After looking over, very slowly, a tray of rings which was placed on top of the show case for his inspection, he picked out a setting which he said suited him, but requested that a larger stone be inserted.

Inquiring how long it would take to set it, he threw down a $10 bill on the tray, saying he would leave it as a deposit and return later for the ring. As he walked briskly out and Miss Von Breton turned to replace the tray in the case, her practiced eye detected an imitation diamond in a setting which had been placed in the cushion where a $350 ring had rested but a moment before. She called quickly to Mr. Von Breton, who was inside the counter near the front window, and he rushed out after the disappearing stranger. The latter had stepped into the next doorway and was looking carelessly in a display window, thinking that his pursuer would hurry on up the street and miss him. But the jeweler recognized him, and grabbing him by the throat, accused him of the theft.

The man first denied it, but later pulled the stolen diamond from his pocket and returned it, demanding to be let loose. Von Breton throttled him the tighter, whereupon the thief offered him money for his release. At this time Detective Jones appeared on the scene and took the man in charge. The diamond nabber showed a tendency to resist arrest and a policeman was called to aid in seeing him safely to jail. The jeweler says he will do all he can to see that the sneak gets the limit of the law for his crime, as such persons are a constant menace to the trade.

The prisoner gave the name as Harry Ellis. He says he is a new arrival in the city.

WILL MAKE A CONEY ISLAND OF OCEAN PARK

H. C. Wyatt and Abbot Kinney Will Spend Half a Million Dollars on an Immense Amusement Beach Enterprise

Ocean Park at Santa Monica is to be turned into a Coney Island.

The place is not an island, but H. C. Wyatt and Abbot Kinney are to make it into one.

Mr. Wyatt said yesterday that the transaction was closed by which fifteen acres of the Casino golf links were to be devoted to the enterprise by Mr. Kinney, the management to be in Mr. Wyatt's and Mr. C. A. Summer's hands.

"The place will be a veritable Coney Island," said Mr. Wyatt. "Mr. Kinney will invest in the undertaking something like $500,000. A large canal will be dug around the place; this will be used for boating and night spectacles. On the island thus formed will be hotels, cafes, theaters, and all the attractions of an amusement kind that have made Coney Island famous as a resort. There they are open to the public for only a few months each year. At Ocean Park the entertainment offered will be open twelve months in the year.

"The affair will be carried out on a large and imposing scale. Every appurtenance will be first class in all respects.

"An admission fee of ten cents will be charged to the island, and the same fee will be paid for admittance to the side attractions. This in addition to my other enterprises will keep me busy, but this is a city where you must keep up with the procession.

"Mr. Kinney has a large quantity of property adjoining the island that we are to make, so if we need more area it can be had."

THE NEW VERTEGRAND

This Means Much to Thinking Men and Women

If the Profession have found their Ideals among the makes of Pianos represented by the Birkel Company, doesn't it stand to reason that those not so well posted are safer in making a selection from such a house?

For the benefit of prospective Piano buyers, we publish the names and addresses of teachers (arranged alphabetically) who have bought from the Geo. J. Birkel Co., together with the instruments of their choice.

Unionism Whipped in San Francisco—Colorado's Blight.

SAN FRANCISCO.

OWN TERMS FORCED DOWN THEIR THROATS.

Carmen's Union Secured Nothing for Which it Asked.

Unionists Sold Out by Selfish Leaders—Neither Side Satisfied With Settlement, and Peace is Only Temporary—How Schmitz "Flim-Flammed" the Union Members—Secret Ballot a Farce—Rise of Stableman Finn.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 6.—The great bluff of the Carmen's Union has been called, and there will be no strike. It was all settled without the assistance of either President Mahon of the national organization, or President Cornelius of the local body. The carmen got nothing that they asked for. They had forced down their throats the very terms which they so emphatically rejected one week before. Not a single concession was made by the company.

So far as Mahon is concerned, he wanted no strike. As for Cornelius, he was of as little consideration in the settlement as a dog on the street. Cornelius was compelled to acquiesce at the last moment, and will undoubtedly get his billet at the City Hall for his part in the selling out of the union. It was a good thing for Cornelius and for the union that the settlement came as it did, but it is an open question whether the company gained by it. The whole question will surely have to be thrashed out in the future, and never again will the company have so good an opportunity to make lasting peace.

The net result of the compact entered into between the union and the company is temporary peace. It may be said without fear of contradiction that neither side to the controversy is satisfied with the result. The people of San Francisco are satisfied, for the evil day has been postponed.

FRICTION BEGINS AT ONCE.

One of the clauses of the new agreement states that when a man is discharged for failing to ring up fares there shall be no appeal. It is of record at the company's office that on Tuesday, when all the men thought the strike would come that night, nearly every conductor "knocked down" fully half of the fares he collected. Manager Chapman spent most of his time that day ordering discharge checks for conductors caught stealing the company's money. These men will be discharged and the number is so great that new trouble may arise within a week. The men went to work systematically to get money belonging to the company because they thought it would be needed as a strike fund.

Manager Chapman stated Wednesday that the company would need 200 new men at once, and many more would be needed in a short time. This means that every car will have a student aboard and this, again, will be a source of discontent on the part of the men. If the company announces that a conductor is discharged for failing to ring up fares, the men themselves have agreed that there is no appeal to the union, but it will undoubtedly be claimed that the charges of the company are baseless and the union will be asked to interfere.

UNION WILL FALL.

The settlement of the vexing question sounded the knell of the Carmen's Union. Already hundreds of members are talking loudly about the way that they were thrown down by Cornelius and the executive committee, and since they know that they will get just as good treatment whether they belong to the union or not, they will soon become lax in the payment of dues, and disintegration will set in. The downfall of the union will not be so rapid as it would have been had there been a strike, but it will be as sure. But with Cornelius in a soft position under the city administration, the head and front of the offending will not care whether the union goes to pieces or not.

The statement of the company that it would "take up" the question of discharge with the union does not carry with it the assurance that it will change its position as to the discharge in question. There has been no assurance given the men that when the mooted question is "taken up" it would mean any more than listening to the men and telling them just what they were discharged for. The only thing the company pledges itself not to do is to discharge any man because of his affiliation with the union. This position has always been taken by the company, and in granting it nothing new has been added to the compact between the contending parties.

ANOTHER "UNION VICTORY."

The effect of the settlement will be bad so far as the other unions of the city are concerned. It will go out from the union leaders that unionism has achieved another great "victory." The rank and file who are manipulated by the agitators will be told that the United Railroads have been brought to time, and the poor dupes will take it as gospel truth. Labor will be even more arrogant that before, and the whole battle will have to be fought over again.

That this belief has already gone abroad was evidenced last Wednesday night when a band of union stablemen entered a restaurant and slugged two non-union stablemen who were quietly eating their supper. There was no secrecy about the affair, the walking delegate of the union being foremost in the fray. The mob stood in front of the restaurant for half an hour before entering it, and there was not a policeman who dared interfere with the scoundrels, or to protect the victims of the brutal assault.

The unionists believed that Schmitz would defend them and the police knew that if they stopped the union thugs they would be liable to lose their stars. It was broadly stated by the attacking party that the Mayor had secured for the carmen what they wanted, and he would next turn his attention to the livery stables and drive the non-union men out of town.

SCHMITZ "FLIM-FLAMMED" THEM.

Of that famous Saturday night when the Carmen's Union was getting ready to vote a strike on the United Railroads there is much inside history which has never been told. The story of how Mayor Schmitz "flim-flammed" the union in his effort to get a little cheap glory, comes from the inside, and to say that the carmen are angry puts the case very mildly.

While the carmen were talking over the proper form for the resolution calling for a strike, Schmitz hurriedly entered the hall, and was received with wild cheers. He got on the platform and told the assembled unionists how he loved them, and how he was for them, heart and soul.

Then there were more cheers, and wild enthusiasm until one cool-headed fellow wanted to know how the Mayor stood in regard to the strike, and what he would do with the police if the men went out. The Mayor sidestepped and ducked, and gave a little more hot air. But the Mayor found he could not waive aside the demand for information, and finally said that he would see that the law was obeyed.

Then the Mayor informed the carmen that he had been in communication with President Holland of the United Railroads, and he asked that he be given three days time before a strike was declared. He believed that he could get an amicable settlement of the trouble. After much talk the delay was granted and then Schmitz went off to a French restaurant where he wrote notes and tried by telephone to get into communication with the company's officials. In this he failed, for he had deliberately lied to the carmen in the first instance as he had not communicated with President Holland at all.

Schmitz simply gave the carmen what is known in sporting circles as the "double cross." The company would have none of him and now the carmen are cursing him from the depths of their hearts. He placed them in the position of men who can be swayed with a breath, and they resent his interference in unmeasured terms.

That the carmen expected a legal as well as a physical battle is evidenced from the fact that at the meeting of the executive board of the union, just before the meeting last Saturday night, it was decided to give to James G. Maguire a retaining fee of $500 for his services as associate counsel for the union.

SECRET BALLOT NOT SECRET.

The secret ballot as manipulated by President Cornelius of the Carmen's Union and his band of trouble-breeders was on public exhibition last week when the members of the union voted on the acceptance or rejection of the proposed new schedule offered by the company. It was announced by Cornelius that the ballot would be the true expression of the attitude of the men who could vote in perfect security so far as secrecy was concerned, and no one would be influenced in any manner by the executive committee. This sounded well, but when the carmen reached the polling place they found Cornelius and the entire executive board intrenched around the ballot boxes.

Each man was given a blank ballot, bearing at its top the name of the road on which he worked. This would enable the committee to know how the men on the various lines stood. Should any considerable number of votes favorable to the company come from one line, it would be a good field for missionary work.

But that was delicate finesse compared to the raw work done when the ballots were cast. Each ballot was prepared with specific instructions printed thereon to vote "no." When the ballots were presented to the clerks of the election they were folded, generally twice. If there was but a single fold they were not disturbed, but if they were folded twice or more the clerk deftly unfolded them to a double.

In front of the ballot box was a lighted candle which burned from the opening of the polls at 7 o'clock in the morning until the close at midnight. By holding the single folded ballot in front of the candle it was easy to discern the place where the stamp was affixed. If "no" was stamped no further attention was paid to it, but if "yes" got the mark, the voter's name was taken.

The carmen discovered the candle early in the day and protests were made, but the candle remained, and then the men voted the way they knew the leaders wanted them to vote.

THE RISE OF TOM FINN.

A few months ago Tom Finn was a stableman, cleaning out the stalls and performing the other duties appertaining to the position of chambermaid in a livery stable. Now, by the grace of the union labor idea as

MITCHELL CRIES PEACE; BUT IS HE SINCERE?

JOHN MITCHELL, president of the United Mine Workers of America, is out in a magazine article on the subject of "The Relations of Trade-Unions to the Maintenance of Public Order." This is a subject of which Mr. Mitchell ought to know something, for the organization over which he presides has had a great deal to do with the creation of conditions which have sometimes made the maintenance of public order more or less difficult.

Mr. Mitchell takes advanced ground in favor of law and order. "It is sometimes claimed," he says, "that no strike can be won without the use of physical force. I do not believe this to be true, but if it is, it were better that a strike be lost than that it succeed through violence and the committing of outrages." He further says that while there are times "when a great issue is at stake and the struggle seems about to be lost, when the use of brute force appears for the moment to be desirable," the resort to violence is "a short-sighted policy and brings with it its own punishment," for the reason that "a single act of violence, while it may deter a strike-breaker or a score of them, inflicts much greater and more irreparable damage upon the party giving than upon the party receiving the blow, because violence invariably alienates the sympathy of the public."

It is due to Mr. Mitchell to say that his public expressions on this subject, whether written or spoken, have usually been against the use of violence by strikers. But his counsels have been strangely at variance with the practices of those for whom he speaks. While he has counseled "peace, peace," they have waged war of a most relentless and indefensible character against men who refused to submit to the oppressions of unionism. Every strike in which members of the United Mine Workers have engaged has been characterized by violence, ranging from murder and arson down to social ostracism and petty persecutions of all kinds.

Men are estimated, and it is right that they should be estimated, rather by their acts than by their professions. It is of little practical consequence whether labor leaders advocate or deprecate violence, if the men whom they control habitually practice violence when engaged in strikes.

There is a homely saying to the effect that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating." Mr. Mitchell's influence in the organization of which he is the head is very great—almost supreme. If he is thoroughly sincere in his declared antagonism to violence in labor disputes, how is it that violence is an invariable accomplishment of labor disputes in the coal regions? Would there be violence if Mitchell and the other labor bosses should send out the mandate, "no violence," at the beginning of a strike?

Is there a tacit understanding that Mr. Mitchell's denunciations of violence are designed principally for the public ear, but are to be taken cum grano salis by members of the union when engaged in the congenial occupation of breaking the heads of non-unionists? It would almost seem so, if we may form conclusions from results rather than from the plausible out-givings of John Mitchell.

It is useless for Mr. Mitchell or any other apologist for the excesses of unionism to endeavor by specious arguments to show that unionists are not responsible for the violence which usually accompanies strikes. The responsibility in such cases has been often fixed so conclusively as to leave no room for doubt. All the special pleading that may be indulged in by Mitchell and others in behalf of law and order will be unavailing to alter the fact of this responsibility. It will also be difficult for Mr. Mitchell to make the public believe that those whom he represents have experienced an eleventh-hour repentance which will deter them, in the future, from the commission of such crimes as they have been guilty of in the past.

Whether sincere or not, Mr. Mitchell is right in his expressed conclusions on this subject. Nothing is more injurious to the cause of trades-unionism than the lawlessness resorted to by unionists to win their battles. A cause which depends for success upon the violation of law is unworthy of success and cannot long retain public sympathy and confidence, without which it is foredoomed to failure. If this truth can be impressed upon the members of trades-unions generally, to such an extent as to bring about a decrease in the lawlessness accompanying industrial disputes, the unions themselves, in common with the general public, will be decidedly benefited.

ANARCHY IN COLORADO.

A Startling Review of the Terrible Conditions.

What Unionism Has Done to Injure the State.

Horrible Acts of Violence During Strikes.

Nowhere is the blight of unionism, and the lengths to which unionism will go to accomplish its ends, better illustrated than in the State of Colorado—a State that has been in a deplorable condition of intermittent industrial turmoil for many years and in practically uninterrupted labor trouble for the past year or more. The Western Federation of Miners, fighting for the "closed shop," and seeking to unionize every mining camp in the State, has prosecuted a warfare teeming with the most infamous outrages; and this organization has injured the State in such measure that it will require many years of peace and work and struggle to place Colorado in the same commanding position of prosperity and bright outlook that she held a year ago.

The labor troubles in Colorado are the subject of a long article, by Ray Stannard Baker, in McClure's Magazine for May. The following excerpts from that article will be quite sufficient to answer the absurd claims made by the Western Federation of Miners that it is not responsible for Colorado's present unfortunate industrial condition. Mr. Baker says in part:

"The two chief centers of the metalliferous strike are Cripple Creek and Telluride. In both of these districts the union was strongly intrenched. In Cripple Creek there had been peace and prosperity since the strike of 1894; in Telluride since the strike of 1901.

"But a few mines in Cripple Creek were still 'open,' still defied the union, still employed 'scabs.' In order to force these bold ones into line the leaders of the Western Federation early in the year 1903 began a campaign among the workers in the reduction mills and smelters of the State, seeking to bring them into the same organization with the miners. At the same time they had another and equally important purpose—that of forcing a universal eight-hour day, especially in the smelters.

BEGINNING OF THE STRIKE.

"Threatened with defeat in their attempt to organize the new classes of workingmen and to force the eight-hour day by a direct campaign, the Federation decided to bring the recalcitrant mill and smelter owners to time by cutting off their supplies of ore. They proposed to do this by ordering the union miners of Cripple Creek and Telluride to refuse to work in any mine shipping ore to the 'unfair' mills and smelters—particularly to MacNeill's mill at Colorado City.

"In August, 1903, the Federation used its really great power, and nearly all the mines in the Cripple Creek district, and later in the Telluride district, were closed down. The miners of Cripple Creek and Telluride had no grievance of any sort whatsoever; in Telluride, indeed, they indirectly broke their contract with their employers in order to go out.

"Worse than this, these contented miners were ordered to strike without being consulted as to whether they wished to go out or not. In most unions and the best unions, the power of calling strikes is hedged about with restrictions, and the men themselves must vote on the question. Indeed, the referendum method was practiced by the Western Federation of Miners until its last convention, when a resolution was put through placing the extraordinary work of calling strikes in the hands of President Moyer, Secretary Haywood and the Executive Committee.

"Mistakes are punished equally with crimes, and we see now the inevitable results that follow a sympathetic strike. Here were the mine owners of Cripple Creek, innocent of any offense in this connection, working on good terms with their men; they are suddenly subjected to a disastrous strike and great losses; they are used as a club to drive certain outside but friendly business interests into dealing with the very organization which is responsible for their present difficulties! Is it surprising that these mine owners should be forced together by mutual indignation into a powerful defensive association?

MINE OWNERS ORGANIZE.

"Having organized, the Mine Owners' Associations of Cripple Creek and Telluride began, after the manner of the trade union, to sum up all the exactions and grievances to which they had been subjected by the union for years—things that might have been passed over but for the fight now forced upon them.

"So the fight began. The mine owners saw plainly that they could not open their mines on a non-union basis without protection from the State troops, and so they brought influence to bear on the Governor, and the troops were sent to Cripple Creek and Telluride. The mine owners even advanced the money to pay the troops!

"The subsequent developments show that the troops really made no attempt to do impartial police duty; they sided openly with the mine own-

LABOR AND LAW, LIBERTY AND A LIVING.

Fundamental Principles as Enunciated by the Printing Trades Alliance of Los Angeles.

To quote Prof. Shaw: "The laws of God and man accord to independent and free labor the following inalienable rights and privileges:

"They have an equal right to remain unorganized; that is, to remain aloof from the labor unions, that labor unionists have to join the same.

"They have a right to labor where, and when and how they please, and on what terms may seem good to them, within the limits of the law, and without interference from any one.

"There are no more reasons for interfering with them in the pursuit of lawful labor than for interfering with any other class of laborers, or with any other kind of labor.

"To interfere with them in the prosecution of lawful labor by intimidation or personal violence, is a crime that should not for one moment be tolerated by the law of the land.

"Unorganized laborers have the same right to organize to protect themselves from molestations on the part of labor unions that the members of the latter have to organize for the betterment of their condition.

"The right of any man, or men, individually or as a class, to remain unorganized rests (a) upon the divine intention, (b) on the freedom of the human will, and (c) in this country on the Constitution of the United States."

And that is just what the Printing Trades Alliance of Los Angeles stands for; it is the platform on which it asks the declaration of every loyal citizen of the Republic; it is the basic reason for its existence, and on which it makes its appeal for the rights of employer and employee. Why? Because sound in morals; because grounded on economic law; because sane and just. Don't you think so Mr. Banker, Mr. Merchant, Mr. Manufacturer, Mr. Professional Man, and you, Mr. Employee? Verily, "the hand of Douglas is his own."

May we not hope for your fellowship and good wishes in the interests of labor and the law, liberty and a living?

The Drama—Plays, Players and Playhouses, Music and Musicians.

AT THE THEATERS.

Burbank.

"AN Enemy to the King" is to be produced at the Burbank theatre by the Baker company for the week starting this evening.

Robert Nelson Steven's romance in the hands of this organization will probably prove a much stronger card than "Trilby." Guy Standing, the new leading man, arrived from New York last week and will make his first appearance in this play; he will enact the role of Tournoire, Huguenot captain. Miss Rebecca Warren will play Mlle. De Varion, a role which should afford her excellent scope for the display of emotional ability.

The play deals with events occurring in France immediately after the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Mlle. De Varion is employed by Governor Nevers to assist in the capture of Tournoire, a Huguenot captain. She is to receive in remuneration for the service the freedom of her father. The climax of the play comes when she discovers that she is in love with Tournoire, and that she must choose between her lover and her parent.

Sparkling comedy is alleged to be intermingled with the more serious portions of the piece, with language glistening with wit and repartee.

During the Baker engagement the management asserts that only offerings of established reputation will be presented. The only matinee of "An Enemy to the King" will be given Saturday.

Grand Operahouse.

"The Man of Mystery," which will appear at the Grand during the week commencing with this afternoon's matinee, is said to be a drama whose nature is exactly suited to the demands of the Grand's patrons, with a fitting cast to make it sufficiently strong.

The play deals largely with the mysteries of hypnotism, and the authors have endeavored to place in it thrilling and unique situations, tempered with comedy.

Laurence Grattan, who will appear in the role of "Shadow"—the hypnotist of the piece, is the originator of the part, and asserts that he has made a special study of the science of hypnotic suggestion. Miss Elizabeth Hale, who has the leading characterization, has for the past six years been a Coast star, at the head of her own company.

Among other members Miss Vail de Vernon and Stanley Johns are to be mentioned. J. J. Cluxton is another acquisition. He has been featured for four years in "Mam'selle Hawkins," "Why Women Sin," and other attractions.

Orpheum.

Tomorrow night Wilfred Clarke and his company of players will present a sketch entitled, "No More Trouble," at the Orpheum. The little offering is adapted from the French, and is reputed full of lively situations. Clarke is well-known, and according to managerial report is well supported.

Lew Sully, known as "The President of the Laugh Trust," is another new one. The truthful press representative asserts that he has never been called dull or uninteresting, and is an excellent single-handed entertainer.

La Petite Adelaide is a dainty little dancer from the Shaftsbury theatre, London. Her pictures appear promising. Miss Effie Ingalls, a niece of the Kansas senator, will appear this week in songs.

Ethel Levey, the Four Mortons, Wilson & Heloise and Mlle. Amoros remain. The bill seems good.

Broadway.

For the coming week this amusement house will offer six of their standard numbers.

The program is topped by Jack Symonds, who was the feature of last week's bill, in a tramp monologue. Charles Chenoweth, a cornetist of reputation; Stanley & Scanlon, musical sketch artists in a potpourri; Addison & Livingston, in songs and dances, and Rich, the new baritone, are other features.

A new act entitled "The Honor of France" has been especially prepared by Carsey & Company—four people in leading roles and others to complete the cast.

Bernhardt-Campbell.

The most interesting announcement has just been made in London that a temporary artistic alliance has been arranged between Sarah Bernhardt, the greatest living actress, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

These two are to appear together in London for a season during the coming summer in Maurice Maeterlinck's "Pelleas et Melisande."

It is not recalled that the divine Sarah has ever acted in any of Maeterlinck's queer dramas. But Mrs. Pat has a leaning in that direction, as Chicagoans will remember.

A greater contrast between temperaments could hardly be imagined than the contrast between the temperaments of these two actresses. Bernhardt, fiery, emotional, and all-compelling, will be thrown into more striking relief than ever by Mrs. Campbell's placidity. The Englishwoman has no more verve than a marble statue, whereas Sarah is a lambent flame.

But Mrs. Campbell has beauty and poise and these will be made more effective by Sarah's restlessness and unceasing energy.

It may not be a successful combination, but it is certain to be a notable one.

Of late Mrs. Campbell has been leading woman for Lewis Waller, the English actor. Sarah has been making one of the greatest hits of her long career in Sardou's latest drama, "La Sorceriere," over which all Paris has gone made with delight.

But, after all, the question remains: What is there in "Pelleas et Melisande" for Sarah? The Campbell beauty and grace will be well displayed in the Masterlinck play. But what chance is there in it for the Bernhardt genius?—[Unidentified.

Langtry Epigrams.

Mrs. Langtry, according to the agent of publicity, has a quiet and nimble wit, and has recently developed a fondness for epigram.

"You can lead Americans, but you cannot drive them," is quoted as one of the Lily's latest. Another, "An American audience understands all kinds of humor; an English audience only the English kind."

The English actress loves American audiences for many reasons. One of them is that they do not "boo." "Booing on a first night is a most sepulchral sound," she says.

Regarding critics, Mrs. Langtry thinks it is largely a matter of liver—whether they are pleased with a play or not: "A good liver makes a good critic." "A law should be made," says she, "making it a misdemeanor for critics to attend a performance in company with their wives or sweethearts. They are always wrongly influenced by them on first nights."

The use of the word "troupe" in connection with theatrical companies is another thing which the "Jersey Lily" would have abolished. In England, she says, only trained dogs are members of "troupes." Some newly-arrived English women complained to Mrs. Langtry that the bells on the street cars were positively "nerve-racking."

"No one here pays any attention to bells," quoth the actress. "Even the old man whom I have run over with my automobile so many times—in the newspapers—never hears the bell."

Here is a last bon mot which "Mrs. Deering" got off just previous to election day: "So many people confuse prominence with noise; it is too bad this belief is not confined to the politicians."—[New York Times.

QUIPS AND CUES.

Elfie Fay is to star next season in a musical comedy by Herbert Hall Winslow called "Lady Bobby."

Charles Wyndham and his company are coming to America for a three months' visit, beginning in November.

The New York managers now charge the recipient of a pass 10 cents for each seat which goes to the actors' fund.

Bertha Galland will join the "Two Orphans" cast next season. A new star will be secured for "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

It is currently reported that Frederick Ward and Katheryn Kidder will be starred next season by Wagenhals and Kemper.

Bijou Fernandez is going to marry W. L. Abingdon, lately Amelia Bingham's leading man. The first Mrs. Abingdon was Rachael de Solla, an English actress.

Klaw & Erlanger have secured the dramatic rights to Gen. Lew Wallace's novel, "The Prince of India." J. I. C. Clarke is to make the adaptation.

John T. Kelly and Weber and Fields have had some misunderstanding, with the result that Mr. Kelly threatens to leave the company.

Elizabeth Tyree, supported by Leo Ditrichstein, will appear next season in an adaptation of "Heureuse," Rejane's great success.

Mme. Janauschek has finally accepted the hospitality of the Actors' Home on Staten Island. Such is the end of one of the most distinguished dramatic careers of the nineteenth century.

Mabel Taliaferro, who gave Chicagoans so much delight three years ago in Yeats's "The Land of Heart's Desire," is making a great hit on the road as Lovey Mary in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Mabel is only 17.

Virginia Harned is playing "Camille" at the Harlem Operahouse in New York this week, while Margaret Anglin is playing it at the Hudson Theater. Miss Harned, in her version, does away with Camille's cough and absolutely refuses to die in bed in the last act.

No announcement has been made by Charles Frohman of the plans he has laid for William Faversham next season. Mr. Faversham will be seen in a new play, but just what play is at present a secret locked in the breast of Mr. Frohman. Current report has it that it is quite likely that Faversham will be seen in "Joseph Entangled," a smart comedy of English maners, which is at present one of the most pronounced successes on the London stage. Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett recently announced that she had just completed a play for Mr. Frohman, and that it was intended for Mr. Faversham. It is quite likely that no decision will be reached so far as the public is concerned until Mr. Frohman and Mr. Faversham meet in London.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Conference Entertainment.

IN attendance upon the General Conference is a body of young men representing Claflin University, which institution is one of the oldest and best-known for the education of colored youth in the South. It is located at Orangeburg, S. C. These men have appeared in a number of religious services in connection with the conference, and many requests have been made for them in a full evening's programme. They will give a concert at Simpson Auditorium Tuesday, rendering negro songs, plantation melodies and other selections.

Three lectures are scheduled for this week. Tomorrow evening Rev. J. M. Buckley, editor of the Christian Advocate and well-known Methodist, will talk upon "Theosophy, Dowieism and Christian Science." Wednesday evening Bishop Charles H. Fowler will give his celebrated lecture upon 'Abraham Lincoln." Friday night Rev. Dr. W. A. Quayle will give a talk upon the fictional hero, "Jean Valjean." Dr. Robert McIntyre will probably lecture during the week, also.

Watkin Mills, one of the most celebrated oratorio basses of the world, will be the soloist at the conference production of "Arminius," to be given on the evening of May 21.

Ellery Farewell.

Ellery's Royal Italian Band will enter upon the last week of its engagement this afternoon at Chutes Park. New music has arrived and will be introduced at the open-air concert, with many of the old favorites.

At the evening concert in Chutes Theater an extensive group of themes from "Il Trovatore" will be presented, accompanied by melody from a new set of "Cathedral Chimes," which are played upon sets of resonant tubes of varying length.

During the coming week, in addition to the afternoon concerts, every evening except Monday and Thursday will be filled out in Chutes Theater. There will be a Hungarian night, a Wagnerian night, an evening devoted entirely to Verdi compositions and one to Mascagni. Miss Adaline Stevens, soprano, will sing with the band.

Cohen Benefit.

Many friends of Gertrude Cohen who heard her in piano recitals before she went abroad to study, have expressed a desire to hear her again, and at the same time to assist her in pursuing her musical studies here at home for another season.

She has been the recipient of many compliments on her excellent work while in Europe, and feels that she owes much to those who assisted in sending her for the year to eminent teachers in Berlin.

A concert programme is in preparation now for the last week in May, the event to take place in Simpson Auditorium.

At Long Beach.

Arrangements have been completed for a musical festival to be given at Long Beach the evenings of Thursday, June 30; Friday, July 1, and Saturday, July 2, with programmes both in the mornings and afternoons of the last two dates. The festival will be modeled after the great festival of Worcester, Mass., and Ocean Grove, N. J. A large chorus of children's voices will be the chief attraction one evening; a chorus of women's voices alone will be heard one afternoon; the second afternoon the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra will give selections, and on the closing Saturday night a chorus of 300 voices, with prominent soloists, will give an oratorio. The details are in the hands of an energetic committee of Long Beach citizens, and rehearsals are being held regularly.

Immediately after this will come the intellectual feasts of the annual Chautauqua, which will begin Monday, July 11. Among the men engaged are Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis—successor of Beecher at Plymouth Church; Prof. L. J. Beauchamp, noted scientist, and Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson, U.S.N. Another feature of the season will be the presentation of Massenet's "Eve," by the Los Angeles Choral Society, and a further night's entertainment will be devoted to a series of solo and ensemble effects secured by a number of male quartettes and vocalists taken from the various male choral societies of Southern California. The "Preludes" are to be given by a number of artists of reputation in the musical and literary world.

Musical Malaprop.

Among such a mass of players as comprises a great orchestra there are "characters" enough to supply a new Dickens. One of these characters, according to the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post, is noted more for his love of big words than knowledge of their meaning. During Mr. Seidl's lifetime he played in the orchestra at Brighton Beach. One day the tuba player, who sat back of him, had a very difficult part to play in Liszt's symphonic poem, "Mazeppa." Hearing his heartfelt sigh of relief on its conclusion, Mr. Malaprop turned and asked, "Barnum had one, hadn't he?"

"What?" was the query.

"A Mazeppa, of course," was the answer. He had confounded the hero of Byron with a zebra.

"Do we play this with or without reputation?" he asked one day of a colleague.

Playing in a new theater on tour, the man who sat next him looked up and announced: "The acoustics are bad here."

"Are they?" he said, critically, sniffing the air. "I have such a cold thta I can't smell. But I take your word for it."—[New York Times.

Patti Anecdote.

Everyone knows that Mme. Patti is extremely careful in financial matters, insisting on having her fee for singing in her hands before she would sing a note. Mapleson, the famous impresario, told the following anecdote which shows this side of the cantatrice's character:

"I was bound by my contract to pay her before the beginning of each performance the sum of $200. One eevning I could only give her $160, which she refused to accept. Her agent announced to me that since I had failed to keep the contract it would be annulled. I comforted myself with the thought that I had other resources and besides had $160 in my pocket.

"Two hours later the agent waited on me to say that on reflection Mme. Patti would not break the contract. He was empowered to accept the $160 and to say that Mme. Patti would be on hand in time for the performance ('La Traviata,') in complete costume, except her shoes. As soon as the doors were open and tickets were sold I could pay the remainder of the money. As soon as she had it in her hands she would draw on the shoes and step on the stage when her cue was given.

"I gave him the $160. After the box office was opened he came again. Only $32 had been taken in. This I gave to him to hand to the prima donna, hoping that she would feel justified in giving the word to begin the performance without waiting for the remaining $8. But this expectation was only partly fulfilled. With a contented expression on his face the agent came back the third time with the comforting message that Madame had put on one shoe. 'When you show her the remaining $8, she will put on the other shoe.' And so she did when I handed her that amount. Then, beaming with pleasure, she stepped on the stage and the opera was most brilliantly sung."—[Unidentified.

Pitfall of Greatness.

Alas for the great men who must become fads! Indeed, to become a fad is the most awful thing that can befall a man. And this has happened to Richard Strauss. It has also happened to Hugo Wolf, who, at least is dead and cannot know the results of this faddism which are serious to contemplate. It was to be hoped that the songs of these writers would only be attempted by artists of the first caliber, but to be confronted with a group of songs by Richard Strauss or Hugo Wolf upon five or six programmes a week has an indescribably dampening effect. To be perfectly honest, a great many people sing well enough to hold the interest in a certain sense, if they sing songs that fit their limitations, and it is well for these people to understand that when they enter the arena with Strauss as a circus proposition it will not only turn audiences away from themselves, but from others, as the strain is too severe to be endured.

Be it understood now and here that to sing Strauss songs it takes not only a voice capable of every degree of art but it takes a musician great in every sense, and it takes an accompanist who, outside of being an impeccable technician, is a great interpretive master. This estimate is not an exaggeration. If singers are not ready to meet these demands, they must leave Strauss and Wolf—and here let us add Brahms—off their programmes. These writers represent musicians to whom the element of show or effect has never occurred. The average singer thinks of nothing else.

Unless presented in the most artistic manner, there is no such thing as melody, and the phrasing is as necessary to the presentation as are ink, pen and paper necessary to set down the thought. Without every detail, these songs are wild, cacophonous ravings, and that is what we have to listen to upon the programmes of every teacher's pupils, and upon the programme of every aspirant for public favor. It is asking too much of people who have to endure a good deal, anyhow.

And now as a word of warning to such singers as have already fine positions before the public—the songs of Strauss and Wolf will be the snags which will wreck their reputations as musicians, as it is not enough to be a singer with musicianly attributes—one must have been born a musician first and a singer as well.—[Musical Leader.

Lutheran Service.

Harry G. Archer and the Rev. Luther D. Reed have compiled, and the General Council of the Lutheran Publication Board of Philadelphia has published, a "Choral Service Book" for the use ow Lutheran congregations that has many points of interest. It is an attempt to retsore to the liturgy of the Lutheran Church the Gregorian plain song that originally belonged to it, and that is little known and less used, especially in the English part of the church in this country. "Cruelly divorced from its natural companion, (the Gregorian chant,) the liturgy has been unequally yoked together with an effeminate liturgical music that is devoid of dignity and virility, and utterly unable to rise to the demands of truly liturgical contents, form, or feeling," say the editors. Their attempt to contribute toward a reform of this state of things is of precisely the same kind and based upon the same grounds as Pope Pius X.'s recent order to the Catholic Church to abandon worldly music in the church, and to return to the use of the Gregorian tones; the Pontiff, of course, speaking with the voice of unlimited and unquestioned authority. This book, it should be noted, has not been produced under any influence from that movement in the Catholic Church, for it was published months before Pius X. assumed his sacred office. In pursuance of their design, the editors have given the entire service of the Lutheran Church with the Gregorian chant, which should, according to their ideas, accompany it, written out fully in modern notation. There are also added the proper accompanying harmonies to the responses. In the same volume is bound "The Psalter and Canticles Pointed for Chanting," and with accompanying harmonies for the responses, by the same editors. The prefaces to both books contain much interesting historical and practical matter, showing the place that the Gregorian chant had from the very beginning of the reformation of the Lutheran service, recalling the fact that Luther and all his coadjutors always expected its use in the service, and tracing the loss of this music through the rise of pietism and rationalism. There are explanations as to the nature and purpose of the Gregorian chant, and some very practical suggestions for its study and proper delivery.—[Unidentified.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Aino Ackte is one of the sopranos already practically reengaged for the Metropolitan Grand Opera forces for next season.

There is a movement in London in favor of a permanent subsidized national opera.

The Italian composer Olfano is composing an opera based on Tolstoi's "Resurrection." Olfano is in Moscow now studying Russian life.

Maurice Grau writes from Paris that his health is improving so fast he thinks he may be able to resume active business in another year.

The grand opera season in Boston proved a fiasco and Herr Conried announces that hereafter he will take the Metropolitan company there for only one week.

A German musical paper says that Mascagni is to make an artistic tour in 1905, beginning at Weimar, and visiting the cities of Dresden, Berlin, Hamburg, Prague and Vienna.

During a recent performance of "Tristan und Isolde" in Rome, Queen Helena entered her box. The conductor gave a sign, the singers withdrew to the wings, Wagner's music was stopped and the Italian royal hymn "Marcia-Reale" was struck up by the orchestra.

The well-known vocalist, Marie Sasse, informed her doctrine that once between acts she lost her voice from smelling violets. Christine Nilsson discovered that the perfume of roses impaired her voice, and carefully removed all strong-smelling flowers from her house. Similar testimony is given by the famous bass singer, Delmas. Mme. Rene Richard, the great Paris teacher of singing, noticed that girl's who came to her classes wearing flowers, always sang better when the flowers were removed to another room.

The Beethoven museum at Bonn has just been enriched by some interesting scores given by the firm of Frederick Cohen. The pieces were secured from the Possonyi collection of Vienna. Worthy of note are the first sketches, much corrected, of Beethoven's sonata in C minor, the last one he composed for the piano; a series of variations on the air "Enfant, ne veux-tu pas dormir?" from Winter's opera, "The Interrupted Easter Feast;" an annotated copy of certain passages from a trio of Mozart; the entire score of the trio, op. 116, in the manuscript of a copyist but with autograph corrections by Beethoven, and finally a great quantity of letters full of information about the master, his works, his family and his friends.

Vladimir De Pachman, the noted Russian pianist, has been announced for a new American tour next season. He is expected to arrive in this country early in the coming October, and by April or May will give between eighty and 100 concerts. His tour will open with orchestral appearances and recitals in all the large cities, which will keep him in the East and Middle West until January 1, when he will proceed to the Pacific Coast, and the tour will include the Texas cities, either going or returning. M. De Pachman has not been heard in the United States since the season of 1899-1900, when his reputation was firmly established as one of the foremost interpreters of Chopin, among living pianists. LABOR.

[illegible] in Eugene Schmitz, he is a member of the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco.

In Finn's union capacity, he is the [illegible] of the Stablemen's Union. [illegible] must be said, to his credit, that [illegible] in life to a supervisorial position has not given him inflated [illegible] to the extent that he has forgotten the odor of the stable. He is still with the boys, and as president of the union is now using his position as City Father to further the cause of the striking or locked out, stablemen.

While he is a sworn official of San Francisco, and is looked upon as one [illegible] was elected to guard the interests, peace and prosperity of the great [illegible] by the Golden Gate, in his capacity as member of the Stablemen's Union he is just now engaged in harassing citizens and destroying the business of taxpayers and business men. He now receives $100 a month from the city, much more than was ever his [illegible] while he was washing buggies and pitching manure from the [illegible], but that does not prevent him [illegible] neglecting the city's business [illegible] he arranges the details of boycotts and pickets on livery stables. He is in charge of the strike and it [illegible] duty to see that the men who have taken the places of the union [illegible] receive the worst treatment [illegible] at the hands of the toughs and bullies who make streets noisy in the vicinity of the boycotted stables. One of the most recent occupations of Finn, in his dual role of City Father and president of the union, is the [illegible] of bands of non-union men [illegible] at the instigation of his union for carrying concealed weapons. [illegible] non-union men who had been assaulted by strikers, secured pistols and [illegible] to defend themselves from [illegible] attack. Notice was at once [illegible] to a policeman and he arrested the men. Under ordinary circumstances $50 would be considered ample [illegible] for the offense, but Finn had an [illegible] ready to insist on a heavy [illegible] in compliance with this demand [illegible] was raised to $200, which was furnished by the Stable [illegible] Association.

[illegible] Smith and Albert Taylor, [illegible] pickets, were arrested [illegible] Police Judge Cab[illegible] to the testimony and then inflicted a fine of $100 on Smith and of $30 on Taylor. The judge was not content with this punishment but scored the brutes severely saying:

"When a man is fighting against man in a labor struggle there seems some excuse for actions done in the heat of controversy. In this case, however, the disturbance was caused by insults cast by the defendants at young women. In the case of Smith I should certainly imprison him but for the fact that some of the worst language complained of does not appear to have been addressed directly to the women. In the future however, if another case of this description comes before me I shall give the guilty parties the limit of the law."

As neither Smith nor Taylor had funds, and as no friends came to their relief they went to jail where they will probably serve out their fines.

BOYNE'S PERNICIOUS ACTIVITY.

Fire Commissioner Boyne, one of the recent Schmitz appointments from the ranks of labor-unionism, has distinguished himself by using the power of his position to assist a labor union in making effective a boycott. When the Stable Owners' Association announced their open shop the Stablemen's Union took up cudgels and entered into a fight against it. The stables had no difficulty in getting all the stall cleaners they needed and it began to look as if the stablemen would have to crawl back if they wanted to go to work again.

Then Boyne, member of the Board of Fire Commissioners, came to the front in their defense, and notified the St. George Stables that unless it went back on the open shop proposition the fire horses of the engine company next door would be taken from the stable. The stable keeper did not see that he could lose his honor for the sake of providing for half a dozen horses, and so notified Boyne. The result was that the chief of the engine company received notice from Boyne to remove the horses.

As the city had no provision for caring for the horses the animals were taken to the street and hitched to posts convenient to the engine-house, where they still remain, subjected to all the changes of weather, and without shelter of any kind.

TROUBLE FOR BOYNE.

The Citizen's Alliance has taken steps to see that Boyne receives all that is coming to him for his use of the city government to fight against a business house which pays its taxes for insurance of protection against lawbreakers. Proceedings in impeachment will be begun at once, and the question of whether or not a city official has the right to use the city's property in an effort to fight the battles of a labor union, will be tested in the courts. If there be any way of reaching Boyne through the courts he will be made to suffer to the fullest extent.

As Boyne was sustained by all the other Schmitz appointees on the board, and as the Mayor has not taken steps to set aside Boyne's action, it is understood that the step was taken advisedly with the connivance of the Mayor. If this can be proved then the Citizen's Alliance will go after the Mayor himself and compel him to explain his position in the matter.

PICKETS ARE LAZY.

This incident reminds me of another connected with the same strike, which may be witnessed any day in front of a livery stable in Pine street. The boycott against the stables is enforced by a number of pickets who are supposed to walk up and down before the boycotted stable, bearing a banner, which contains the following device:

"Do not patronize this stable. It is unfair. It threw out union men and took in non-union men."

The pickets in front of the Pine-street stable were not accustomed to the strenuous exercise involved in walking constantly up and down in front of the place and complained of being tired. The accommodating liveryman saw their plight and sent out a number of chairs which were ranged along the sidewalk and then he invited the pickets to take possession of them and relieve their weariness.

They gladly availed themselves of the chairs and may be seen any day sitting calmly before the doors of the stable displaying their banners.

GOOD FOR THE BOOTBLACK.

This incident is one phase of the situation here, and the boycott of a bootblack stand on Lick Place, just off Post street, is another. For some reason the bootblack got into trouble with the Bootblacks' Union and his stand was picketed. The Citizens' Alliance immediately sent another sandwich man there and the two hobnobbed together as they walked up and down in front of the place. The strange companionship attracted quite a crowd of curious people and the result was that the bootblack and his assistants were compelled to work overtime to attend to all the business which came that way.

Business men heard of it and would go blocks out of their way to have their shoes shined by the boycotted bootblack. If the boycott is continued for any length of time the fortunate bootblack will be compelled to enlarge the stand and double the number of workers in order to accommodate his rapidly increasing trade.

It has now come to be the recognized thing for a boycotted place to have its business so increased that many firms are said to be courting the anger of unionists in the hope that they may come under the ban.

The Bismillah Ceremony.

A little Moslem when she is 4 years 4 months old goes through the "Name of God," or Bismillah ceremony—which begins her real life. She is dressed in cloth of gold, with a veil and wreath of flowers; and friends are invited to salute the little queen. She sits on a gold cushion, which must be borrowed if she hasn't one, and all the rest sit on the floor. Then an old mullah recites very slowly a certain verse from the Koran, which is also written in saffron on a silver plate Bibi holds in her hand. She runs her fingers over the words, and stammers them after him. "Say it now, Bibi; be a good girl, then you shall see your presents." Soon they all cry, "Shabash! Shabash! Wah! Wah!" and the ceremony of the little girl's first lesson in religion is over. She salaams mamma, then shows her presents to her sahelia (girl friends.)—[Everybody's Magazine.

THINGS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Our population is now 79,900,389, that is as accurately as the Census Bureau can give it to us. An increase of 2,905,814 since the census of 1900. New York has 3,716,139, Chicago 1,873,880, Philadelphia 1,367,716, St. Louis and Boston are at the 600,000 mark, Cleveland 414,000, Buffalo 380,000, Baltimore 313,000, Cincinnati 332,000, San Francisco is 356,000, Pittsburgh 345,000, Detroit, Milwaukee, New Orleans and Washington are around the 300,000 mark. Fourteen of our States exceed 2,000,000 each in population and but twenty-two States now have less than 1,000,000.

Between the years of 1776 and 1820 the alien immigration to this country amounted to 250,000; for the year ending last June 857,046 strangers landed on our shores. Pretty nearly 600,000 of these are people from Southern and Western Europe and not all of the most desirable classes. In times gone by nearly all our immigrants were from Great Britain, Ireland, Germany and Scandinavia, a sturdy stock, and progenitors of some of our best citizens. We might as well admit the Chinese as three-quarters of the immigrants we are admitting today.

London statisticians tell us that during the past twenty years there has been a general reduction in what might be termed the graver crimes, yet, there seem to be waves of crime every once in a while that last for periods of six months or more, crimes of striking similarity, markedly showing the power of suggestion or example. 1903 there were 661,667 persons tried in England for crimes of various sorts, chiefly against property. 1902 figures were 787,676. The crimes against public morals show a still greater decrease. The British taxpayer pays out nearly $30,000,000 a year for what suppression of crime there is and $60,000,000 a year for the relief of the poor.

The railroads of the country afford the very best opportunities for progress to a young man of energy and ability. More men rise from the ranks in railroading than in any other vocation. President Harris of the Burlington system began as a telegraph operator, so did President Earling of the Milwaukee, President Calloway of the Union Pacific was an auditor's clerk, the general manager of the Baltimore & Ohio was a machine-shop laborer; President Underwood of the Erie, Manager Chaffee of the Alton, and Manager Schaff of the Big Four all started as brakemen; President Truesdale of the Lackawanna as clerk, and President Newman of the Lake Shore a station agent.

The pay roll of the United States navy represents $20,000,000 a year.

It is estimated that the education and bringing up of every child in this country costs the nation $1000. That sum represents the capital invested in each citizen. Assuming that it costs Ireland but one-fifth of that amount, or $200, to bring up a child, she has lost, completely lost an investment of $800,000,000 in the past fifty years by reason of the emigration, chiefly to this country. Her loss has been our gain.

One night in the middle of January last a comparatively restricted territory in London was visited with the object of counting the homeless ones. There were found 1463 men, 196 women, 46 boys and 4 girls, (the boys and girls being under 16 years of age,) who were walking the streets or asleep under stairs or areaways. Besides these, there were 23,442 people asleep in "common" lodging-houses, places of temporary shelter, so that it is safe to calculate that in London City one out of every two thousand people has no fixed abode or means of sustenance.

The latest estimate of the numbers of people practicing the different religions gives the Christians as 549,000,000; Mohammedans, 202,000,000; Jews, 11,000,000; Confucians, 253,000,000; Taoists, 32,000,000; Shintoists, 17,000,000. The same authority states that the population of the world is very nearly evenly divided between Monotheists and Polytheists.

The conquest of Egypt by the Saracens deprived Europe of papyrus and caused a sort of hiatus in the history of the world for the simple reason that people making records, etc., scratched out ancient writings on that parchment in order to use it over again, thus losing to the world most valuable records.

The Chinese Six Companies represent the six districts near Canton, China, from which almost all the immigrants come to this country. The companies bring the immigrants here, paying their passage, supporting them until they get work, taking care of them when sick and carrying their bones back to China, for all of which they exact enormous rates of interest, and black-mail their subjects from time to time, as occasion arises. The Highbinders are simply the agents of the companies in black-mailing or in removing the Chinamen who refuse to be black-mailed or are otherwise obnoxious to the companies.

Natural gas plays no unimportant part in our economy. It is now the fuel in 8000 factories in this country, is used for cooking in more than half a million homes, 4,500,000 people use it as an illuminant and it supplies the world with lampblack.

There is no immediate danger of our supply of alum giving out. In California alone there are two mountains that are estimated to contain a million pounds of pure alum.

In 1860 there were in the Southern States between 500,000 and 600,000 slave owners and slave hirers, and there were 4,250,000 slaves, or about eight slaves to each owner. Since that time the South has expended about $140,000,000 for the education of the negro. Today the blacks own about 3.2 per cent. of the personal property of the old Southern States. Arkansas, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia contain 30.39 per cent. of the entire negro population of the United States. The proportion of blacks is from 85 to 93 per cent. of all convicts confined in Southern penitentiaries.

Last year there were 8700 fires in New York City, netting a loss of $5,864,000; Chicago, 4106 fires with a loss of $4,729,000; Philadelphia, 3079 fires, $3,009,000; then Boston with 1683 fires and $1,489,000 loss. This year's record will, of course, be tremendously swelled by reason of the Baltimore fire. An abnormal record, granted, but nevertheless, barring it, the regular yearly loss of about $100,000,000 in property besides many lives, is appalling and that the conditions should be permitted to continue is nothing short of criminal, silly negligence. It is possible to throw such safeguards around old buildings as to greatly lessen the danger of fire even though it is impossible to eliminate that danger altogether, but no new buildings should be permitted that will increase that danger. It is bad enough to have to use highly-inflammable furnishings, and to store combustible materials in buildings, but with wood as expensive as it is today, there is neither economy nor good sense in using it anywhere about a building. Steel work for the framing of buildings, thoroughly encased and protected with fireproof tile and with external walls of brick and terra cotta, materials that have passed through fire in their manufacture, are the only materials that should be permitted in city buildings, particularly of any size. Air shafts, elevator shafts, and stair wells should be enclosed in fireproofing; fire travels very slowly in horizontal directions while the moment you offer a vertical trend for it, it fairly rushes in its destructive course. Then, too, cities should at once install high-pressure water services that are used only for fire, such as the service in Philadelphia. Heretofore less intelligence has been exercised in the prevention of fire in our cities than in any other municipal duty. It is high time to mend our ways.

TURBINES FOR CUNARD.

An Important Experiment in Steamship Propulsion—Fits All the Waters.

[Scientific American.] Great interest attaches to the announcement that the Cunard Steamship Company, guided by the expert commission which was appointed to investigate the subject, have decided to install turbine engines on the two large passenger steamers which they are about to build with the assistance of the British government. The readers of the Scientific American were prepared for this announcement by the article which we published a few months ago, in which, by the courtesy of the local representative of the company, we were enabled to give the leading dimensions of these great ships, and state that in all probability the decision of the committee would be in favor of the turbine.

The announcement is a most momentous one, and by many engineers and steamship men it is considered that the company has shown great daring in applying the turbine to engines which will probably indicate when pushed to their maximum capacity, about 75,000 horse power. It is argued that the success of the turbine on small river and cross-channel steamers of not over 1500 to 2000 tons displacement does not guarantee its success when applied to vessels of such an unprecedented size as these new Cunarders. The Scientific American has never shared any of these doubts. Indeed, we have always urged that there were no complications, no novel conditions, to limit the usefulness of the turbine if it should be installed in the engine-room of a large modern steamship; that, on the contrary, the duty required of the engines of fast Atlantic liners is of the very kind in which the steam turbine has shown to best advantage, at high speed, and under full load.

The committee which was appointed last September was probably one of the strongest and most representative that could have been gathered together. It included, among others, the superintendent engineer of the Cunard Company, the late director of naval construction, and the deputy engineer-in-chief of the British navy, and the engineering managers of three of the largest shipbuilding companies in Great Britain, including a member of Messrs. Denny & Co., who have built most of the turbine-propelled passenger ships that are now in service. When the committee was formed, there was only a small amount of information available as to the relative economy of turbine and reciprocating engines when they were doing similar work. The work of the committee was directed to making careful comparative tests under such conditions. One of these was carried on at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where reciprocating and turbine engines were run at various proportions of their power and also at full speed, the output of electricity being recorded in each case and the condensed steam from the engines being accurately measured. In addition to these tests ashore, others were carried out on the sister passenger steamships Arundel and Brighton, which are identical in everything but motive power, the Brighton being driven by turbine engines and the Arundel by reciprocating engines. The two vessels were run side by side from New Haven to Dieppe and back, all possibilities of error due to variations of weather and tide being thus eliminated. Subsequently the Brighton made several trials in the Solent, running at different rates of speed.

Throughout the whole investigation the committee have been fully alive to the fact that it was a great step from the successful propulsion of ships of the size of the Arundel by turbines to the fitting of this type of engine in vessels of the great dimensions of the new Cunard ships. Consequently great attention has been paid to the design of the turbines, with a view to rendering their manufacture as simple as possible, and to securing the well-known advantage of efficiency due to increased size.

The dimensionns of the ships, as already announced, are: Length on deck 800 feet, beam 85 feet, mimimum draft between 33 and 34 feet, on which dimensions the vessels will have a displacement of about 40,000 tons. These figures may be compared with those of the Kaiser Wilhelm II, which is the largest of the high-speed transatlantic liners. This vessel on a length and a draft of 29 feet, the draft beof 706 feet has a beam of 72 feet ing limited by the depth of the water in the German ports. The contract will probably require that the new Cunarders develop a speed of 25 knots on trial and a sustained sea speed of 24½ knots an hour.

The 75,000 horse power will be developed upon four shafts. On the outer pair will be the high-pressure turbines; on the inner pair the low-pressure, and also the go-astern turbines. The coal consumption will be over 1000 tons a day.

Early Times Out West.

In his reminiscences Henry Villard tells of Horace Greeley's visit to Colorado. He and a companion went in one of the express stages and had met with a singular and perilous accident. In driving through a herd of buffaloes the animals, probably maddened at the sight of the red color of the coach, had attacked and upset it. Greeley had received a severe cut below his right knee, crippling him for several weeks. Being confined to his room in the hotel by his wounds Greeley was greatly disturbed by the sound of revelry by night that rose unceasingly from the barroom. Villard writes: "His wrath culminated on the third night of his tortures. I was fortunate enough to be with him and thus became an eye and ear witness of what happened. About 10 o'clock he got up and insisted on limping to the barroom. His appearance, though his presence in the building was generally known, created surprise and instant silence. He begged for a chair, and, 'Friends,' said he, 'I have been in pain and without sleep for almost a week and am well-nigh worn out. Now I am a guest of this hotel, I pay a high price for my board and lodging and am entitled to rest during the night. But how can I get it with all this noise going on in this place?' Then he addressed one of the most pathetic appeals I ever heard to those around him to abandon their vicious ways and become sober and industrious. He spoke for nearly an hour and was listened to with rapt interest and the most perfect respect. He succeeded, too, in his object. The gambling stopped and the bar was closed every night at 11 o'clock as long as he remained.—[Chicago News.

Chinese Railways.

Chinese railway construction appears to have been at length commenced with vigor. A line from Peking southward through Hankow to Canton is one of the projects in hand. The distance from Peking to Canton is no less than 1200 miles.

From Peking southward a line extending for eighty miles has been in operation for some years, and for the last eighteen months it has been opened to a point about eighty miles further south, viz., to Cheng-Ting-Fu. In the course of September this line was opened to Shunte-Fu, 242 miles south of Peking, and work was in progress on its extension for eighty miles further south, while the line was laid out to the Hoang-Ho, 410 miles south of Peking. To meet this line from Hankow, on the Yantse-Kiang, about 400 miles west of Shanghai, a line has been built, and was opened in September, for 136 miles north, and it will be completed by the end of the year fifty-three miles further, to Yeng-Chen-Sien.

A further extension is in hand north to the Hoang-Ho, about 100 miles; upon this extension there will be a viaduct more than one and a half miles long. It is hoped that unbroken communication will be established from Peking to Hankow, a distance of about 750 miles, by the end of 1905.

The Peking, Hankow and Canton line will be a great interior trunk communication, touching the sea only at Canton, although accessible by ocean steamers at Hankow for 400 miles inland (700 miles by river.) A Belgian company has a concession for a line from Kai-Feng to Hanan. This will be a branch of a line which Belgian capitalists are building from Peking south to Hankow.—[Engineering.

May Sale Muslin Underwear

Not a happening, but a well planned, timely event.

This store believes in timeliness above all things, blanket sales may be alright in mid-summer and muslin underwear sales in mid-winter, but we believe to be the most use to the public, (which should be the mission of every well organized store,) sales should be held at or near the time that the goods are to be used. For this reason this sale of under muslin, coming as it does, just when we expect warm weather is of particular interest while the remarkably low prices attached to the goods will make it a most profitable event for our customers. Prices in many instances are less than the present actual cost of production, make and finish are unexcelled, every garment being made in a wholesome, well lighted factory under most sanitary conditions.

Every garment offered in this sale bears the label of the consumers' league which is a guarantee of perfection in finish, and healthful surroundings in manufacture. The styles are exceptionally clever, the varieties numerous and the prices so low, that you're bound to be interested. The following items indicate the value:

ESSAYS.

From China.

LETTERS FROM A CHINESE OFFICIAL. Anon. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York.

This is a book that is full of the most pertinent truths. It is a matter of no doubt, whether the author is a Chinese official, as the title page of the work indicates, or a member of the western civilization against the failings of which the book is directed, that within its covers is wisdom that should be carefully considered by all those upon whom the progress of western civilization depends. We have not thus at the outset cast doubt upon the authorship of the work before us for the purpose of minimizing the value of the work. We are in hearty sympathy with the thought of the author, however much we may object to his comparisons. We are in accord with his views upon needed reforms, although we do not agree with his suggested means. In other words we may say of "Letters from a Chinese Official" that the work is an epitome of the words of many publicists and scientists, of the words of thinkers and actors who for a century and more have struggled with the problems of western civilization, and struggling have won somewhat in one direction, however much they have lost in another.

"Letters from a Chinese Official" is a scathing arraignment of western civilization. The weight of the book and its arraignment lies in the undeniable truth of the observations that are made. Deny the assertions we cannot and yet we deny in a measure because we dread the exposure of our shame. Yet denial is not what we should take as the limit of resultant effect of the work before us. We should put into effect the thoughts that suggest the denial. We should strive the more earnestly to reform what is and has been and will continue to be unless reform is instituted the cankerous growth that is destined to take from western civilizations their virtue, if not their life. It is impossible not to recognize that the destinies of Europe are closely bound up with those of this country, and that what is at stake in the development of the American republic is nothing less than the success or failure of western civilization.

"Endowed, above all the nations of the world, with intelligence, energy and force, unhampered by the splendid ruins of the past, which, however great, do but encumber, in the Old World, with fears, hesitations and regrets, the difficult march to the promised land of the future, combining the magnificent enthusiasm of youth with the wariness of maturer years, and animated by a confidence almost religious in their own destiny, the American people are called upon, it would seem, to determine, in a preëminent degree, the form that is to be assumed by the society of the future. Upon them hangs the fate of the western world. And were I an American citizen, the thought would fill me, I confess, less with exultation than with anxious and grave reflection. I should ask myself whether the triumphs gained by my countrymen over matter and space had been secured at the cost of spiritual insight and force; whether their immense achievement in the development of the practical arts had been accompanied by any serious contribution to science, literature and art; whether, in a word, the soul had grown with the body, or was tending to atrophy and decay. And looking back over the long history of mankind, considering the record of the nations who have born in succession the torch of civilization which England, even now, is handing across to America, considering all that is disappearing in Europe and all that has not yet begun to show itself here, I should feel that humanity is standing at the parting of the ways, that it is confronted with an issue of a gravity and importance unparalleled, perhaps, since the fall of the Roman empire."

This paragraph quoted above expresses as no words of ours could, the attitude of the writer of "Letters from a Chinese Official" toward the momentous questions with which his work is concerned. But the oriental viewpoint, whether it be real or simulated, is one to rouse healthy antagonism in the minds of those who read the pages in which the author's conclusions are set forth. Our author sees in the institutions of western civilization much to admire, but he also sees much that creates feelings of aversion and more that raise apprehension and most that which compares unfavorably with oriental civilization. The reader will be shocked into a realization that, after all, western civilization may not be the ne plus ultra of civilizations that have been and are. He may even be brought to a realization that the civilization of the present is not adequate basis for a progressive civilization of the future and he may even ask himself if the civilization of the present stands upon as sure a basis as is generally supposed.

The present volume is no more than a hint, it is no more than a cry of warning, but it possesses a dynamic force that is in inverse proportion to its bulk. Not a page but is pregnant with thought that should be in the minds of every American citizen.

The Citizen.

THE CITIZEN. By Nathaniel Southgate Shaler. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

Prof. Shaler has given us a book that is, as the publishers assert, of everyday interest. It is not in any sense a text-book nor is it adapted, as the author intimates, for use in schools of any grade. It may, however, be profitably used as a text of collateral reading in classes in politics, if the classes are doing advanced work and are able to perceive the fallacies and distinguish them from the truths of the treatise. We can see no reason for intimating that the present work is a text-book, and pass by this claim of the projectors of the work for a moment's consideration of its general worth.

"The Citizen, a Study of the Individual and the Government," is, to our mind, a work for the general reader, and viewed as such it may be regarded as one of the most enlightening treatises that has appeared for a long time. It is no dry compilation of facts. It has little of the earmarks of forced instruction, as we may call the method of those who seek to implant knowledge against the will or without the exercise of the acquisitive faculties of the person upon whom the attempt is made. On the contrary, the work is just what it pretends to be—a study.

In a study we look for an expression of the individual opinion of the person to whom we are indebted for the record of the examination of the subject that has engrossed him. In the present instance the work is distinctly personal. It is made up of the observations and thoughts of Prof. Shaler upon the condition of the country, and upon the great questions that have and are engrossing the attention of the people of the United States. It is well then, both for our interest and for our information, that our author is a level-headed man with a wide knowledge and a careful method of thought. If it were not so, the work before us would be worse than useless, for it would be but the reflection of an unsound mind. It would be, in fact, a case of the blind leading the blind.

In the first chapter of "The Citizen" we have a discussion of the origin of mankind, and therein we have an exposition of the theory that man has advanced from a lower stage of civilization to the present position that he now occupies in the economy of nature. It may be said, however, that the chapter deals in generalities and it also goes, and without saying, that neither Prof. Shaler nor anyone else can advance a positive theory as to the origin of mankind, as such.

In a chapter, the second, upon "The Beginnings of Government," our author contributes nothing to our knowledge upon the subject. He has, on the contrary, closely followed conventional theories, and we may add, without regard to the fact that some of them perished not many years after the death of the their promulgators. In a chapter on "What Liberty Is," we find what may be called a rehash of prevalent theories, but we also find many statements that are not only misleading, but erroneous. Our author, too, is evidently misinformed when he says the causes of the American Revolution forced a revolt of the colonists "against the system of privileged castes, and other subjections of the individual man." We are constrained to say that our learned author has not delved very deeply into the political and economic history of the Revolution.

In fact, to get at the marrow of the work before us we must pass over those chapters in which our author deals at second-hand with political theory and pass to those where his personal observation has given the basis for his remarks. Then, whether the reader agrees with our author or not, he will find much that will be food for thought, and much that will be of an informing nature. Such a chapter as "The Citizen and City Governmnet," for example, is worthy of serious consideration as is not that on "Wealth—Its Origin and Distribution." In fact, we may set it down as a rule that wherever we read the personal opinion of our author, deduced from personal observation, we are sure of well spending our time, but whatever we are reading a compilation from secondary authorities we are wasting it, even though the information furnished by these authorities has passed through the alembic of our author's mind.

That the book is unique in its handling of questions of the day may be seen from the following quotation that is taken from an able chapter on "Party Allegiance:" "To sum up this matter concerning the relation of the citizen to political parties, he (Prof. Shaler) may say that these institutions are the indispensable agents of a democratic government. Every citizen should foster and respect them; he should regard them as agents which need continual correction, and be prepared to give this by the use of his vote whenever it is clear that punishment for wrongdoing is deserved. It will be well for him to note that each of the great parties is subjected to peculiar dangers. Thus in the Democratic party there is always the risk that the people who desire to break up the social and governmental organization, in the manner of the anarchists, with the vague hope of bettering their condition by the change, may seek to obtain control. There is also a risk that the idea of local government may be carried so far that the central autority may be dangerously weakened. In the Republican party, on the other hand, the chance is that the richer commercial class may manage the State in its interest, increasing the duty on foreign goods to give them a profit in their business, or that they will so enlarge the Federal power that the States may not have their fit share in the control of affairs, or that the nation may be led into plans of conquest. Against these defects which occur in either of the great parties, which are indeed the evils which belong with their good qualities, the patriotic citizen has ever to be on his guard. So too, as regards the conduct of the political managers, he must remember that from their position they are naturally inclined to look rather to party success than to statesmanly accomplishment; they need the quiet criticism of the patriot in private life, who, standing aloof from the thick of the fight, is ready to help, or, if needs be, control the course of action."

This quotation will show the spirit of the work, and the style in which it is written, and from it, and our assurance he will gather that "The Citizen" is not a work that any thinking man—or woman—can afford to pass carelessly by.

Success.

CONQUERING SUCCESS. By William Mathews. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

This is a book which we look at with suspicion. We have read not a few books of the kind and so have become a little shy and suspicious when we see them. There is a flavor about them which is remarkably alike in all. There is a heaviness of style that seems inevitable. The writers generally seem to know about as much about success in life as the writers of books of etiquette know at first hand about the usages of good society. But we have been disappointed in this volume. We expected to be bored. We sat down with something of the spirit of martyrdom and took the book in hand. It was not a very favorable way in which to undertake an examination of a volume, and we might have done the author of most books a grave injustice if we had come to it with such feelings. We have been disappointed, we have said. But it was because the book is so much better than we expected. We were prepared to say all sorts of sarcastic things about the work, and looked for the opportunity, and we ended with the desire to say as much about the book that would commend it as we could in a short criticism. The book, to begin with, is written in a clear and beautiful style. There is nothing of the dismal hack style that generally appears in these books of advice. Then again it is not "preachy." That is fatal to the usefulness of a book of any kind. The view that it takes of life is neither goody-goody nor mercenary and selfish. It is sound and wholesome from beginning to end. There is not a chapter in the book that has not some good point in it which some one would do well to apply, and, what is best of all, will be disposed to apply. That is the merit of the book that appeals to us most directly. For the great trouble with books of this kind is that they tell what to do, but have not the power of moving the mind to think it worth while doing. And yet we cannot but regret that a book of this sort has such a small opportunity of doing the good that the writer intends, for that he has an immediate interest in helping young and old is evident. The trouble is that such a book will not be read by those who would be best able to profit by it. There is an almost invincible prejudice in the minds of the young against such books as that by Dr. Matthews. They do not want to be preached at, and so they leave it to one side. But we are sure that its usefulness can be enhanced if those who have any opportunity of influencing the young will make the book the basis of their advice. We can think of no book that would furnish more helpful topics to those who have to address classes and societies of young men and women upon practical affairs of the personal life, apart from religion.

THE ARTS.

Architecture.

HOW TO JUDGE ARCHITECTURE. By Russell Sturgis. The Baker & Taylor Company, New York.

Of all arts about which we are most often compelled to have some opinion architecture certainly is the most prominent. We need not read poetry. We can keep away from concerts of music. We can avoid good paintings by neither purchasing them nor going where they are. But if we are to live among civilized persons we must look at buildings. And we will have some opinion about them. They will either please us or not please. They will be beautiful or ugly. But in matters of art the average person never imagines that there are any real principles of beauty except those which are perfectly well known to him. When he gets out of his state of blissful ignorance he is convinced that there must be some ideally perfect building, or at least some rules which are more or less correctly carried out in practice and by which he can determine the beauty of a given building. And it may be that the person in question will become persuaded that he has possession of some or all of those rules. Then we have a mass of critical observations which is vexing to the souls of the lovers of art. The book before us sets about to correct the mistakes of both classes. It undertakes to show the various elements of beauty in buildings, points which are beautiful and which are not seen by the untrained eye because it has never been taught to see them, and does not know of their existence. In doing this the author takes the reader through the various schools of architecture, not attempting to give detailed accounts of the style, but to point out the opportunities for beauty that were contained in the style and to show how it was attained in some of the best examples. In this way the reader is gradually led from a consideration of the simple early styles to the more complex later styles. He is shown the multitude of points involved in any good building, and the impossibility of confining the attention to one characteristic. This was the fault of all so-called classical criticism of Gothic, and for that matter the criticism of Renaissance styles by the revived Gothic school. The second difficulty of the beginner in the study of art and in criticism of architecture in particular was the belief that there were infallible rules to determine the good in architecture. These rules were in general based upon the practice of some one school. The author shows very conclusively that the beautiful in architecture is very varied; that it is manifested in widely different ways; that there can be no hard and fast rules laid down for criticism. We are disposed to think that the author might have been a little more constructive in his work. The reader would have been helped if he found larger groupings of principles from time to time in the course of the exposition. The book is admirably written, and the illustrations are excellent, appropriate and abundant.

Greek Sculpture.

GREEK SCULPTURE: ITS SPIRIT AND PRINCIPLES. By Edward Von Mach. Ginn & Co., Boston.

Greek sculpture is much admired but little known. The ancient statues for years have been studied as interesting curios, rather than as things alive. The dead have no claims upon us; the living alone can teach us, and Greek sculpture is not dead. More and more it is being studied, and as it is studied so admiration of it and recognition of its eternal principles extends. But there are numerous drawbacks to the study of Greek art by the general student. One of these is the style of the average book upon the subject. These books are of two classes, the one contains a multitude of facts and technical discussions, the other is on the eulogistic plan, and tends rather to disgust than to interest. There is, however, among the modern school of art critics an appreciation of the necessity of departing from the methods of the immediate past, and the production of works that will not only be scientific in spirit and accurate in fact, but that will give something of the soul that animated the art of Greece, something of the reason as well as of the effect. To this class of works belongs the volume before us, and, indeed, it may be said to be a pioneer and a path-breaker in the truest sense of the word. In the treatment of the subject the author, Dr. Edmund Von Mach, late of Harvard University, has radically departed from the methods of his predecessors in the field of Greek art.

The author believes in the duality of man, his soul, and his body. Even in statues he perceives a similar division. There is, in the first place, the "all-about-it," and secondly, the idea which the statue interprets, the spirit to which it owes its creation, and the world of thoughts to which it is an introduction. "Familiarity with the visible bodies of ancient statues," says our author, "is the foundation of all knowledge of ancient art, but not everything, as mere matter-of-fact students are apt to believe." "Know the bodies well that you may understand their meaning," may be given as the motto of the book, "for it is only if you understand their meaning that you know Greek art." Now in this statement of faith there is little that is new. Most people will agree with our author that man has a dual nature, although they may disagree with him concerning the details of this dignity. Most people will also agree that to understand art you must understand the meaning of its examples. All this has nothing or little or nothing that is new. But when we come to the working out of the idea we find our justification for terming the present work a radical departure from its predecessors.

Our author has made a new presentation of the several phases of Greek art. The customary chapter headings of dated periods and of names of famous artists disappeared, and have been replaced by captions designed to suggest the evolution of the spirit under which the ancient monuments were created.

The work is designed to be serviceable to the advanced student, and for this reason the author embodied in it the latest results of scientific investigation, and has supplied the work with an extremely helpful chapter of notes and a working bibliography of unusual excellence. There are 160 illustrations. They include pictures of the most recent finds in Delphi, in Argos, and on the islands of the Egean, in Italy, and on the bottom of the sea near the Peloponnesus.

HISTORY.

The Talmud.

HISTORY OF THE TALMUD. By Michael Rodkinson. The New Talmud Publishing Company, New York.

We have before us the "History of the Talmud," by the late Michael Rodkinson. This volume brings to a conclusion the series of volumes, issued by The New Talmud Publishing Company, upon which Dr. Rodkinson has for many years been engaged. It is an unwelcome task to speak disparagingly of the work of one who has been taken from his work here; but justice to our readers requires us in this connection to speak thus of the translation of the Babylonian Talmud that has been but lately finished by Dr. Rodkinson. A translation of the Talmud has been a thing long desired by the scholars of the United States. Whether Jew or Gentile there was a universal desire to see the great monument of Jewish learning in such a form as to be at the disposal of those whose piety was in excess of their learning as well as those who protended to no knowledge of Hebrew and yet desired an acquaintance with the Talmud. Mr. Rodkinson sought to meet the desire by the set of books now known as the "Translation of The Babylonian Talmud." We regret, however, that from the issue of the first volume there arose many complaints concerning the accuracy of the translation, and further, the atrocious English into which the Talmud had been rendered was offensive to scholars. Despite these complaints Mr. Rodkinson persevered in his attempt to set forth a translation of the work and as we have said he completed his task with the present volume which was issued but a short time before his death. But because of the faults that we have mentioned the sale of his translation has been very small, far smaller than they would have been if the work had been well done, and today his translation of the Babylonian Talmud is so universally discredited as to be in no demand among those who know the reasons for the complaints that have been made concerning its inaccuracy, bias, perversion of fact, distortion of text and lack of readability. Further it is alleged, and with a force that seems indisputable from facts in our possession, the methods by which the sale of the Talmud have been pushed have not been those usual with works of the class to which the translation of the Talmud should belong. In fact, the conduct of one of the persons to whom the credit of placing the greater number of books is given can hardly be held to be in accord with certain of the laws of the book commonly called "Leviticus."

We have felt it our duty to go into this matter at some length in order that our readers will be informed upon the Rodkinson translation of the "Talmud" should the same be offered them, as it will probably be, from the fact that a large number of the books remain in the hands of the printer, as security, we believe, for certain accounts, and it is almost certain that an attempt will be made to place these books in the near future.

The present and concluding volume is devoted, not to a translation of the "Talmud," but to a history of it. As a history it is a poor thing and may be called a compilation based upon other works of easy accessibility. Mr. Rodkinson has made such large use of the erudite work of the Meilzner that he has felt called upon to make acknowledgment in the preface, but he neglects to give credit to other writers upon whom he has made large drafts. The term borrow can hardly be applied to the method by which Dr. Rodkinson has lifted portions of Meilziner's work into his own, but as acknowledgment has been made we will not quarrel with terms, but instead will say that the reader will do well to pass the present volume by and avail himself of the introduction to the "Talmud" from which the liftings have been made.

A Tale of Heroes.

THE NORTH STAR. By M. E. Henry-Ruffin. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Once in a while we are offered a tale of the days of the Vikings. Some of these stories are readable, more are utterly worthless, but now and then, as in the present instance, we obtain a novel that possesses more than slight ground for appreciation. Today Mrs. Henry-Ruffin gives us "The North Star," a tale of Olaf the King, and certainly the romance deserves a welcome. Our author has in a historical setting that is well made, given us a group of characters that are exceedingly cleverly drawn, and she causes the movements of these characters to converge to a climax that leaves little to be desired.

"The North Star" does not pretend to be a historical novel in the sense that Prof. Eber's novels of Egyptian life are. True, it is full of history, and true also that by one reading of it may be obtained a very clear idea of the manner in which the early Scandinavians lived and loved and fought, but, nevertheless, these facts will not obtrude upon the reader. He will never mistake the romance for an attempt to administer sugar-coated information. The book is a romance and not a treatise.

The tale is one of love and fighting. Our author succeeds very well in giving us tenth century and not twentieth century love. To be sure, the impulses are the same then as now, and then, too, there is little difference in the manifestations, and yet there is a decided difference in the methods by which lovers are able to enjoy each other's society, and there are different conventions that are strange to our modern minds. So when we read "The North Star" we read of the love of a time a thousand years ago. As with the love, so with the fighting. We would hardly recognize the tactics employed by the warriors of this tale save when brute strength is exercised. Yet bravery was the same in the tenth century as now, and whether fighting with machine guns or with bows and arrows, the warrior of one time to be successful must possess the qualities of any other.

When we first glanced at the work we were of the opinion that our author's best work had been done on her dramatic episodes, but after a close reading we are convinced that the work deserves the largest praise for the character studies. Of these we regard the women as superior to the men. While Mrs. Henry-Ruffin has given us brave and wise men and rash and brave men, and other men worthy of our attention, she has given us woman of a greater proportionate worthiness. We are of course able to detect flaws here and there and even to assert with reason that in one or two instances the author has departed from the high standard that prevails throughout her book; but what of that—we take the work as a whole, and as a whole it is well written and thoroughly interesting.

By Eden Philpotts.

THE GOLDEN FETICH. By Eden Philpotts. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

This story by the author of "Children of the Mist" and other novels of high quality, notably "The American Prisoner," published a few weeks ago and reviewed in these columns, is by no means up to the highest standard of Mr. Philpotts's work. The story itself is interesting, but in no wise does it rise above the character of a boy's book. It does not seem, however, to be intended for children, but rather for maturer readers. There is a large amount of adventure, some lovemaking, and much of the interior of Africa. The story is of an African adventure, and the characters are engaged in seeking a treasure that by treachery has been taken from a person who turns out to be the father of one of the principal actors in the incidents of the story. The golden fetich is not only the means by which the expedition to Africa is started, but secures safety to the members of that expedition when they fall into desperate straits. The book climaxes well, and one can find no fault with the manner in which our author causes incident after incident to appear before our mind's eye. Very fair book of its class is "The Golden Fetich," but its class is not of the highest.

Among the Convicts.

HELEN ADAIR. By Louis Becke. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.

We have always found delight in the works of Louis Becke, but we confess that the amount of delight received from "Helen Adair" is very small. The story is one of the crudest attempts at novel writing that we have noticed for some time, and we are of the opinion that a good story-teller has been spoiled in the attempt to make a novelist. Perhaps we are wrong, and if so we look forward to volumes of short stories that shall equal in interest those that put Becke on a footing with Stevenson in tales and descriptions of the South Sea Islands. There have been few writers who measure up to Becke in his peculiar field. No one will fail to find entertainment in such collections of stories as "The Strange Adventures of James Sherington," "Breachley, Black Sheep," "Pacific Tales," "Ruden the Devil," "Yorke the Adventurer" and "By Ricke and Pool." In the novels written with the collaboration of Walter Jeffrey the standard of interest and the quality of execution is not high; and in the present work it is even lower. The scene of "Helen Adair" is laid in Australia and the characters are sheep men and convicts. There is, too, something of the mariner in it, and we have adventures by both land and sea. To some the book may have a moderate appeal, but to us it is devoid of interest.

A Book of Humor.

FAIRY TALES UP TO NOW. By Wallace Irwin. Paul Elder, San Francisco.

Paul Elder of San Francisco, who has to his credit as a publisher numerous attractive volumes, has given the general public an extremely unique bit of book-making in "Fairy Tales Up to Now." The cover of the book is in imitation of a matrix, except that the type has been reversed so as to have the impression more intelligible to the general reader. The typography of the text of the little volume, while unpretentious, is nevertheless attractive, as is all of the press work bearing the Elder imprint. As to the contents of the volume. The cover of the book indicates the nature of the contents in the following manner: "Extra!!! Old Favorites Sandbagged. Cinderella, Babes in the Wood, Sleeping Beauty, Little Red Riding Hood, Jack the Giant Killer." Wallace Irwin is the author of the text, which is in verse, and in his typical way he has attacked these favorites of our nursery days, and held them up to the ridicule of the older reader. The work of Irwin is not quite up to some of the earlier products of his pen, which have won for him signal success, but his efforts are at all times amusing and the volume will pass a merry half hour.

Short Stories.

A LITTLE TRAGEDY AT TIEN-TSIN. By Frances Aymar Mathews. Robert Grier Cooke, New York. (Price $1.50.)

Short stories of exceptional workmanship are contained in this latest volume by Frances Aymar Mathews. The book is a thick one and includes tales with a number of different scenes and nationalities—Chinese, French, Italian and American. All the stories are well done, but the Chinese tales are by far the best. The first, the story of an American who, meeting with an accident, sojourns in a Chinaman's home, is loved by the latter's wife and suffers a terrible penalty for his unintentional breach of hospitality, has been dramatised. The second story is equally good. It is the story of an American woman missionary to the Chinese, who carries off the only son of a Chinaman to be brought up under Christian influences, and is, in turn, robbed of her own infant son, who is in similar manner, reared as a Chinaman, and educated for the priesthood in the religion of his foster parents. The denouement when the Chinese parents are finally allowed to see their son again at the age of 18, and in return reveal the fact that they were the kidnapers of the American baby, and exhibit the result of their own little missionary effort, is very dramatic.

A Good Plot Novel.

ANNA, THE ADVENTURESS. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50.)

Those who care for the diverting quality of plot fiction will find Mr. Oppenheim's new book worth reading. It is the story of two sisters, the one frivolous to the verge of lightness, the other a girl of serious aim, the two closely resembling each other in appearance. By a curious complication of circumstances, the girl of high aims allows her sister to usurp her name and personality as a means of self-protection, and to this same end finds herself obliged to change her own name and personality for that of her sister, finds herself claimed as wife by an objectionable man, whom she has never before seen, and involved in other embarrassing events. The character of the better sister appears to involve some contradictions, and the book is apparently somewhat hastily or carelessly written, for, after hinging the whole success of the interchange of personalities on the one sister's adoption of the name of Anna in place of Annabel, Mr. Oppenheim brings her out in London under the latter name, living in her aunt's home, and engaged to a man who knows Annabel's unsavory record, yet addressed by both as Annabel. Except for this oversight and the other, smaller inconsistencies noted, the book is very readable.

A Dainty Booklet.

KINDLY LIGHT. By Florence M Kingsley. Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia. (Price 50 cents.)

The Henry Altemus Company publish a specimen of modern fine art book making in a tiny illustrated volume, containing but two short stories by Florence Morse Kingsley. The stories are simple sketches, infused with a devout religious spirit, and of delicate and excellent workmanship.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

The Story of a Horse.

HIDALGO, AND HOME LIFE AT WEST LAWN. By R. A. McCracken. M. A. Donahue & Co., Chicago. (Price $1.50.)

"Hidalgo" is a wholesome, simple story of a horse and of the horse's owners, especially the young members of the family, with whom Hidalgo is a great favorite. This book lacks the charm of Florence Morley's, but is humane and in other respects of excellent moral aim and influence, and will doubtless be read with interest by the young folks.

For Animal Lovers.

LITTLE MITCHELL. By Margaret W. Morley. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. (Price $1.25 net. For sale by Fowler Bros., Los Angeles.)

Margaret W. Morley is well known for her nature stories. Her "Song of Life" is unique—a book in which the children are told, in the cleanest and purest manner, of the propagation of species in the plant and animal world. Her latest book is a story of a gray squirrel found in infancy among the mountains, by a woman tourist, and adopted as a pet. The story is a very pretty one, prettily illustrated, a story to delight the children and one especially to be commended to mothers who desire to teach their children humanity.

NEW MAGAZINES.

The Pictorial American for May is a special World's Fair issue, having for its leading article an elaborate historical sketch of the purchase from the French government of the Territory of Louisiana, and of the centennial celebration in St. Louis of that event. This article is profusely illustrated with large halftone engravings, showing a bird's-eye view of the grounds, buildings, waterways and drives, together with the individual views of buildings and exhibits. The number contains, in addition, a California article by Frank Forest, describing desert scenery, and articles on the missions of Califonia and El Camino Real.

Women will be interested in Martha E. D. White's article in the May Atlantic, on "The Work of the Woman's Club."

A leading article in the World today is Hayes Robbins's "The Employers' Fight Against Organized Labor." "New Methods in School Gardens," by Annie E. S. Beard, is another up-to-date article; and "The Siberian Railway in War" is especially timely.

"Architecture and the Decorative Arts at the St. Louis Exposition" is the title of the leading article in the May number of the Architects' and Builders' Magazine, and a second article of special interest is "Architectural Drawing at the Tuskegee Institute."

Among the contributions to the Youth's Companion of May 5 is a review of the progress made during the last twenty years in the science of bacteriology. The article is by Surgeon-General Sternberg, U.S.A. (retired,) who has himself contributed important discoveries to this department of scientific research. That there are good fairies as well as bad ones among bacteria, some of them being indispensable to our welfare, is one of the facts brought out in this paper.

A very short but exceptionally well-written story is "How Men Propose," by Mary Wilhelmina Hastings in the May Red Book.

The May issue of the Engineering Magazine contains two articles of special importance—"A Comparison of American and European Industrial Conditions," by William J. Clark, and "Wage-Paying Methods," by Henry Hess. Mr. Clark is manager of foreign trade of one of the largest American electric companies; Mr. Hess's paper, the second of a series of three, is written from the employers' point of view. Both papers are elaborate and detailed.

Camera Craft for May has an article of special interest to students of science, on "Photo-Micrography for the Beginner." "Newspaper Photography" is a second interesting article. Bernard C. Roloff has an article in this number on "Lantern Slides from Halftone and Line Illustrations Without the Use of a Camera." A department of this monthly that deserves special praise is its "Photographic Digest" of discoveries, inventions and new books and articles.

Harper's Weekly for April 30 is a special World's Fair number.

This month's Review of Reviews contains a particularly large number of important articles on the war and the St. Louis Exposition. Specially timely is an article on the salient features of the fair—"What Everybody Will Wish to Know Before Going."

PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

Among the books that Putnam's Sons are bringing out is "A Field Book of Wild Birds and Their Music," by F. Schuyler Mathews; a "History of the Republican Party," by Francis Curtis; "Addresses and Presidential Messages of Theodore Roosevelt," 1902-4; "An Introduction to Vertebrate Embryology," by Prof. Albert Moore Reese of Syracuse University, and "The Writings of Samuel Adams," in three volumes.

Doubleday, Page & Co., are finally completing the great Harriman Alaska work. They are now publishing the large volumes VIII and X, devoted respectively to the scientific consideration of the insects and crustaceans of the vast northern territory.

Harper & Brothers have by special arrangement taken over all the novels of Irving Bacheller, including "Eben Holden, "D'ri and I" and "Darrel of the Blessed Isles," and are henceforth the publishers of his past and future work. Mr. Bacheller has just completed a new novel, and this will be published in the fall.

The New York Library is inaugurated by the Macmillan Company with a volume that includes "Aids to Reflection," and "The Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit" by Samuel Taylor Coleridge. The volumes in this library will be distinguished among reprints of classics by their tasteful green binding of cloth or of leather, by the care with which each edition is prepared, and by their convenient size. Forthcoming issues include Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic," Burney's "Evelina" and Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy."

On April 30, Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published the following books: The first two volumes of a military history of "Napoleon," by Col. Theodore A. Dodge; a history of "New Hampshire," by Frank B. Sanborn; "A Guide to the Birds of New England and Eastern New York," by Ralph Hoffman; "Whittier-Land," by Samuel T. Pickard, the biographer of Whittier; a new edition of "An Island Garden," by Celia Thaxter, a pioneer garden book which has for several years been out of print; a special limited edition of "The Coleman Collection of Facts and Documents relative to the Death of Alexander Hamilton," originally published in 1804; and a translation of "Beowulf," by Prof. Clarence G. Child, in the Riverside Literature Series.

Josephine Daskam, author of "The Madness of Philip" and other amusing stories of children, was born in Stamford, Ct., on February 17, 1876. At the age of 14 she was sent to the High School at Stamford, and remained there for four years. From there she entered Smith College, graduating in the class of '98. Her sense of humor developed at an early age. She was married a few months ago to Selden Bacon, and now resides with her husband on Riverside Drive, New York.

The Times' London correspondent sends the following:

Most of the biographies of the late Dr. Samuel Smiles failed to mention that the famous author of "Self-Help" had a decided talent for painting, and originally wanted to be an artist. The fact is worth mentioning, however, as an additional proof of his many-sidedness. Surgeon, editor, railroad man, lecturer, chemist, biographer, he not only turned his hand to many varied employments, but made some sort of a success at each of them. And the themes of the whole shelfful of works turned out by this literary veteran who has just passed away at 91 is significant, as showing how many different subjects appealed to him. TRIUMPH FOR CALIFORNIAN.

Madame Bishop of Los Angeles Receives Ovation.

Americans Continue to Buy Large Land Tracts.

Government to Purchase an Important Railroad.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.] MEXICO (D. F.) April 29.—Madame [illegible] Johnstone-Bishop of Los Angeles, "came and sang, and conquered," by singing herself into the heart of Mexico—something difficult to do in the face of the racial jealousy that seems to control musical circles in this country; but her artistic and social success has helped to break down that jealousy. The visit of this superb and queenly Californian to this capital has done more than volumes of diplomatic correspondence and it has also served to draw the Mexicans and Americans nearer together. This was shown last Sunday at the matinée, when Mrs. Ochoa Miranda, the Mexican soprano who was on the same programme with Madame Bishop, came to the box of the latter and after admiring the American's stylish gowns complimented her with all the impulsiveness of a Latin, and called her "una grande artista." Mrs. Ochoa is a handsome woman, with a liquid voice pure and high and very flexible, and in her selections with Mrs. Amalia [illegible] de Multedo, the noted Mexican contralto, had won merited applause from the hypercritical audience. The same audience was just as spontaneous in its ovation to Madame Bishop on both occasions. The gown worn by the American singer was historical. It was a Parisian gown of lavender crepe de tulle, with ornaments of spun glass, lavishly [illegible] with iridescent paillettes [illegible] glittered with every movement. [illegible] necklace added to the [illegible] of her personal appearance; [illegible] every American present was particularly interested in the lyre of gold [illegible] she wore, for it was the [illegible] people of Toledo, in her [illegible], presented to her by President McKinley in person. Madame [illegible] on both occasions to big [illegible] orchestration brought [illegible] Professor Meneses, who [illegible] much to lift the standard [illegible] Mexico. Madame Bishop, [illegible], her unstudied and [illegible] her grace of costume, [illegible], and her exceptional [illegible] opened the gates of [illegible] American song. The one [illegible] describes her best, in Mex[illegible] "[illegible]tica." She is "persona [illegible] in this music-loving capital [illegible] always be welcomed here, [illegible] by her own countrywomen [illegible] Mexicans, a music-loving people. Madame Bishop will [illegible] farewell concert at the Ar[illegible], kindly donated by the [illegible], May 2. On the following [illegible] night she sings, by invitation of the Governor of Puebla, in [illegible] that same name. She has [illegible] invitations from Guadalajara [illegible], but as she has to ap[illegible] St. Louis on May 17 and may [illegible] at the border by the quar[illegible] that goes into effect next Sunday, she will probably have to forego [illegible] at those two points, and [illegible] homeward a week from next [illegible]. The American Club of this [illegible] the Woman's Club will entertain Madame Bishop. She has been entertained at a number of [illegible] the American colony.

LARGE LAND DEALS.

[illegible] Seymour Thermond, who is [illegible] with Patrick F. Garrett, [illegible], is here for the purpose of [illegible] a deal for 3,000,000 acres of [illegible].

[illegible] of Santa Monica, Cal., [illegible] a deal for the Chamela Lumber [illegible] for the purchase of 140,[illegible] of land in the State of Jalisco.

[illegible] A. and E. F. Greenlaw, of [illegible] Lumber Company of [illegible], are in the city to [illegible] timber lands, the supply in [illegible] being now limited.

[illegible] of this city, who located the original Oklahoma colony in the vicinity of Tampico, [illegible] secured option on 175,[illegible] of land adjoining the property of the Mexican Petroleum [illegible], of Los Angeles, and [illegible] to bring another [illegible] colonists here, as the [illegible] venture has been so successful. [illegible] option price on the land [illegible] per acre.

[illegible] next two years the Y. [illegible] capital will have a [illegible] own, to cost $70,000 gold. [illegible] being subscribed in the [illegible] and here.

[illegible]TATION MATTERS.

[illegible] week the Department [illegible] is busy with the [illegible] of the Vera Cruz & [illegible], for the purchase of [illegible] the Mexican government. [illegible] important line had [illegible] to the wall by reason of the failure of the Maryland [illegible], and the acquisition [illegible] by the Mexican government [illegible] was timely, saving it [illegible] has been a wise move [illegible] the government, giving [illegible] connection, through its [illegible] the Mexican National from [illegible] frontier to the Isthmus [illegible]. The road taps the [illegible] line on the isthmus at [illegible]. The road runs from [illegible] station on the Mexican [illegible] Santa Lucrecia.

[illegible] of the reported purchase, [illegible] C. Van Horn, chairman of the board of directors of the [illegible] Railway, of the lines [illegible] District Street Car [illegible] city, W. W. Wheatley, [illegible] manager, discredited the [illegible] Van Horn had been in Cuba, to look into Cuban investments, and possibly had decided to get control of the street car system in Havana. But he had not been in Mexico and certainly would not try to purchase what he had not examined.

The Mexican Mail and Steamboat Company has been organized at Tampico, for service on the big Panuco River and on the canal between Tampico and Tuxpan. This is the largest canal service in the country. The boats will be light stern-paddle steamers, made in the United States and shipped, in sections, to the port of Tampico. The first section of the canal will be opened to traffic about July 1, and the American constructors expect the entire inland waterway of 100 miles to be ready for business on the glorious Fourth next year.

MINES AND MINING.

It is said that the American mining men engaged so actively in the development of the gold properties in the States of Oaxaca, incident to the recent discovery in the Taviche district, will put in a 100-ton smelter. Charles Hamilton, a mining engineer from San Francisco together with Max Friend, an English engineer, are attending to the details.

A group of Colorado capitalists, through the International Bank & Trust Company, has made application to the government for a concession for the establishment of a stock exchange in this capital. Direct wires will be installed to New York, to handle American as well as Mexican stocks. About twelve years ago an effort was made to start such an institution in this city, but it did not then prove a success, for the time was not ripe. Mexico has a mining stock exchange, but it is limited to mining, whereas the new American venture will deal in railroads, industrials, mines and all other form of securities.

The Ocean Daily.

A new international daily newspaper will be launched—and that's the best word for it—on May 15. It will be printed simultaneously on most of the transatlantic fleet while they are in transit.

The news of the world will be laid before the 20,000 to 30,000 passengers afloat at breakfast time every day this summer, much in the form that the readers are used to finding it in New York or London. The paper will be made up like a regular city journal.

The Marconi apparatus, of course, will be the means by which the news will reach the ships. All the lines except one now are equipped with the wireless instruments. The ships of the American, Red Star, French and both German lines, and some of the Atlantic transport ships now issue a daily bulletin of news from a summary supplied them by a bureau of publicity, which has its headquarters in Boston. The Cunard line gets its news from Reuter's agency.

Ships with the Marconi equipment are now practically in constant touch with either one or other of the Marconi transmitting stations at Poldhu, Eng., and Canso, Nantucket and Babylon, on the American coast. It is completely practicable to expand the present news service into a full a telegraphic report as a well-managed newspaper need have ashore, covering everything from the war to market reports.—[New York World.

VETERANS OF TWO NATIONS.

DOUBLE REUNION OF MEXICAN WAR SURVIVORS.

Chinese Government Appoints Brother of Chinese Ambassador at Washington Its Representative in Mexico, Where It Never Before Maintained a Legation.

CIUDAD DE MEXICO, Abril 29.—Liang Hsun, hermano al Ministro Chino, Chentung Liang Cheng, en la capital de los Estados Unidos, llego a México el Miércoles proximo pasado. Espera la venida a este pais de su hermano, quien funciona como ministro tanto en los Estados Unidos como en México, y al regresar el ultimo a la ciudad le Washington, el primero quedara aqui como Encargado de Negocios. Las relaciones comerciales y politicos entre México y la China son ya tan importantes y crecidas que el Ministro no las puede atender adecuadamente desde Washington, por consiguiente la designacion de parte del Gobierno Chino de un representante diplomatico directo.

La combinacion ferrocarriles, recientemente verificada en México, bajo la inciativa del Ministro José Yves Limantour, Ministro de Hacienda, cuenta ya con otra via férrea, la del Vera Cruz & Pacific. Es un camino de hierro que parte de la linea del Ferrocarril Mexicano cerca de Cordoba y entronca en la via del Ferrocarril Nacional del Istmo de Tehuantepec, frente de la estacion de Santa Lucrecia. Asi el Gobierno tiene ya el "control" sobre una sistema ferrocarrilera, de via ancha, desde las fronteras de Téjas hasta los puertos importantes del Istmo. La via del Istmo es propriedad exclusiva del Gobierno Mexicano, que tanto la aprecia como elemento estrategico, que siempre ha rehusado las ofertas mas pingues para su compra, de parte de capitalistas extranjeras. Mr. Huntington de California ofrecio por ella la suma de trienta millones de pesos en oro. Americanos é Ingleses han ofrecido iguales o mayores cantidades por esa via ferrea, bien corta en distancia, pues tiene apénas 192 millas de mar a mar, pero lo unico a que consentido el Gobierno ha sido su alquiler, por el término de cincuenta años, a Sir Weetman Pearson, Inglés, quien construye los puertos terminales de Coatzacoalcos y Salina Cruz.

MINES AND MINING.

BIG CHECKS ARE REFUSED.

STOCKHOLDERS DECLINE TO RECEIVE PAY FOR MINE.

Bisbee Investors Warring With Los Angeles Directors—Deposit of Good Copper Ore Forty Feet in Depth—Rich Dividends Paid to Scotch Stockholders.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.] TUSCON, Ariz., May 6.—Cashier M. J. Cunningham of the Bank of Bisbee has made up a collection during the past few days of $100,000 in checks that he will return to Los Angeles, endorsed "refused." The checks are drawn in favor of Bisbee stockholders in the South Bisbee Mining Company who have been warring at law for the past two years with the majority of the stockholders, who hold the organization, with headquarters in Los Angeles. The largest check to be thus returned was received by James Letson. It is for $22,702. The payment was intended by the Los Angeles directors to be in full for the transfer of the stock of the Bisbee residents to the Lake Superior and Pittsburg Development Company, which has purchased the South Bisbee property for $1,250,000, the stock issue received in return representing $5,000,000 in $1 shares. The Bisbee stockholders are suing the Los Angeles majority, demanding the return of nearly 3,000,000 shares of stock, on the ground that it had been acquired fradulently and for inadequate consideration.

The new Copper Queen smelter at Douglas is still being operated at only about half capacity and the furnaces at Bisbee are being kept warm, with no date set for their final abandonment.

A rate of $1.50 a ton has been made by the El Paso and Southwestern railway on ore freights from Tombstone or Bisbee to El Paso. About 5,000 tons of ore a month are shipped from Tombstone to the El Paso smelter. Heavy shipments are being made also from along the line of the Nacozari railway, in Sonora.

The main shaft of the Tombstone Consolidated Mines Company has reached a depth of 770 feet, 200 feet below water level. The great pumps are handling 3,000,000 gallons of water a day.

DEPOSIT OF COPPER ORE.

A deposit of good copper ore, said to be forty feet in depth, has been struck by diamond drill on the Copper Glance property below Bisbee. Similar exploration on the Marquette and Arizona property has found a fine body of gold ore, where copper was expected.

Much interest is being taken in the camp of Paradise, in the Chiricahua mountains, in Eastern Cochise county. The camp is in what has been named the California District, within which 300 claims have been staked off within the past few months. The main operations in the District are by the Chiricahua Development Company, which is sinking a large shaft, with equipment for driving it 2000 feet. A large body of low-grade copper ore has been well developed already.

The old Azurite mines south of Tucson have been sold for for $55,000. Of this sum $30,000 has been paid.

The Greene Consolidated Copper Company is to have an elaborate exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition, including ore specimens and models of several of the company's mines.

Dividends on the stock of the Arizona Copper Company at Clifton for the past year aggregated 60 per cent. It is understood that the company, which is of Scotch ownership in the main, will soon water the stock four for one.

The Shannon concentrator at Clifton is about complete. It will have a capacity of 400 tons of ore a day, the concentrates to be added to 200 tons of ore that will be smelted direct.

Rich ore deposits have been found by a Mexican lawyer, Gutierrez Lara, in the famous "Devil Caves," five leagues south of Sanuaripa, Sonora. The caves have the reputation among the common people of being haunted by hobgoblins, though, about 100 years ago, the spirits were exorcised by a holy bishop of the church.

COAL FOUND AT DUNCAN.

Several years ago a resident of Duncan, James P. Tong, found coal by drilling. Six feet of coal and shale were found at sixty feet, a small vein of apparently clean coal at 100 feet and a twenty-inch seam at 180 feet. Tong's partners refused to sustain him in a proposition to deed part of the property to the Arizona Copper Company for farther exploration work. So nothing has been done since. Now the discovery of coal at Morenci has stirred Mr. Tong up again. He has started to work at the bottom of an old forty-foot shaft, opportunely near, and will sink at least to the first coal bed. Clifton interests are to prospect in the same neighborhood by means of a diamond drill.

A representative of the Colorado Iron and Fuel Company has visited the new coal beds near Morenci and has made favorable report, both on the quality of the coal and the character of the formation. The Detroit and Arizona Copper companies now use 4000 tons of coal a month and a market of at least 10,000 tons a month is near at hand if the beds stand development.

The newest oil discovery in Arizona is near Mammoth, sixty miles north of Benson, on the line of the Prescott and Eastern railway. A San Francisco operator named Brady, said to have formerly been in the employ of the Standard Oil Company, is drilling on the field. He holds an option on a large section of the district. A number of residents of Bisbee have become interested in the field and have provided the necessary coin for drilling a test well.

Youngest Notables of Present Time.

The richest baby in the world is said to be the little son of the late Harold Brown of Providence, R. I. The death, within a few days of each other, of his father and his uncle left this youngster the possessor of a fortune which is estimated at between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000.

The youngest general in the world is Sultan Ahmed Mirza, youngest son of the late Shah of Persia, and brother of the present Shah. He was born in 1891, and is therefore only 13; but he is a full general in the Persian army, and has a regular staff. He holds reviews of the troops and plays soldier with an army corps for a plaything.

The youngest king in the world is Daudi Chau, King of Uganda, who is now about 8. He holds his court seated on a scarlet throne, with a leopard skin mat under his feet, and bearing in his hand a toy gun. The British exercise a protectorate over the young King and his kingdom, and have established for him a sort of parliament, which he opens regularly with much pomp.

Little Daudi Chau speaks English and gives state dinners, at which there is a curious mixture of African and European foods and customs, though the royal table is supplied with fine linen, cut glass and silver brought out from London. At these banquets the chief duty of the prime minister is to see to it that his royal master does not eat enough to make him sick.

The youngest master of foxhounds in the world is Lord De Clifford, who is 18, and has been master of the Dalgan pack, in County Galway, Ireland, for two years.

The youngest professional organist in the world is Kathleen Mills, who presides over the great organ in the Catholic Church at Ongar, Essex, Eng. The regular organist falling ill, little Miss Mills took her place and played with such skill on the instrument that all the people were astonished when they found out that a child of 11 years was presiding over the keys and stops.—[Scranton Truth.

Timing an Egg.

Cooks are often accused of want of method, but the Aunt Dinah in Howard Paul's new egg story is not open to any such reproach. Invariably when she put the eggs in the saucepan she began singing "Rock of Ages," and sang through two verses.

"Aunt Dinah," asked Mr. Paul, "are there not three verses in that hymn?"

"Dar is, massa, but I sings only two when I wants 'em soft and three when I wants 'em hard."

His other egg story is good, too. He was traveling on a Pennsylvania railway and when his breakfast was brought the eggs were underdone.

"What time are we making on this train?" he asked the waiter.

"A mile a minute, sir."

"Then boil the eggs another mile and they'll be quite right."—[London Truth.

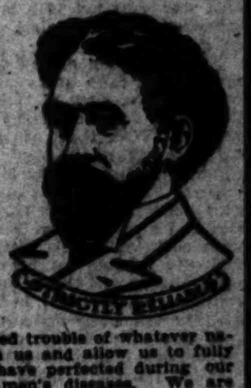
Our Medical Journal Free

MEN



Downstairs at our entrance, 607½ South Broadway, you can help yourself to our medical journal, an extensive description of our special work is given. It contains full information, which we cannot publish in our advertisements. If you live out of the city, write for one.

Every man who is suffering with a contracted trouble of whatever nature should come and talk his case over with us and allow us to fully explain our methods which we originated and have perfected during our twenty-one years' experience as specialists in men's diseases. We are anxious to demonstrate our ability, especially to men who have been treated by alleged specialists without having obtained satisfactory results. Our rapidly increasing business is made so by our living up to every promise we make verbally or through our advertisements. The treatment we give is based upon scientific knowledge. The best recommendations we have are the thousands of cured cases in Los Angeles, throughout Southern California and Arizona. Call on us. We will give you personally a thorough examination and consultation free of charge, together with an honest diagnosis of your trouble. If your case is incurable we will frankly tell you so. If your case is curable we will insure you a perfect and permanent cure if you place yourself in our hands.

Varicocele.

One man in every four has some degree of varicocele sapping his vital strength, but not one in a hundred knows how to distinguish a genuine, successful specialist from a smooth advertising pretender. There is but one certain and infallible way to be sure and that is to visit and personally talk with 20 or 25 prominent business men who have been cured. We have been curing varicocele in Los Angeles 10 years and are prepared to show cured patients by the dozen. Don't take any doctor's word, but be sure to see the men who have been cured before you pay out one cent. If you will observe the above advice you will not lose your time and money in vain. Read the above over again and remember it. There is no knife or pain in our treatment. We never fail to cure in one week. We defy any living person to show one case treated by us which is not cured and satisfied.

Contracted Diseases.

By this we mean specific blood poison, urethal inflammation, strictures, local ulcers and swellings. We have warned men against neglect of treatment, of unsuitable methods for treating this most serious disorder. Patent medicines and treatment by drug clerks are decidedly dangerous experiments, and should under no circumstances be resorted to. The cheapest and best course is to go at once to an able specialist, who has the ability and experience necessary to do for each case exactly the right thing at the right time. You thus avoid dangerous complications which might through poor treatment become a lasting annoyance, and oftentimes assuming a dangerous character. Every patient under our care is thoroughly cured before he is discharged. All who come to us receive courteous treatment. Consultation and examination free.

Vital Decline Can Be Cured.

Vital decline, commonly called weakness, is the result of a diseased condition. This disturbing cause is nearly always found in the prostate gland, where the nerve center is located. The prostate becomes affected by one or more of several things, such as badly-treated local diseases, indiscretions, excesses, varicocele, etc. We published years ago the first information ever given out on prostatic trouble as the cause of vital weakness; since that time our theories have been accepted by all the best eastern specialists, and at the same time every pretender specialist copies our advertisements, knowing absolutely nothing of our successful means of relieving men of this trouble. No one but a thorough specialist can succeed in curing these conditions. Anybody can advertise, but the genuine specialist only can satisfy the patient and give him value received.

Stricture.

I can do more for stricture in three days with my improved modern, up-to-date method than could be done in three months with the old, painful sound treatment. I can cure nearly every case in ten days, and by a cure I mean the stricture will never give any further trouble. Remember, my method is absolutely free from pain—and is certain in every case.

Piles, Fistula and Rupture.

DR. HARRISON can and will positively cure every one of these troubles placed under his treatment. If you are suffering from either, it costs you nothing to call and talk with him; his methods of treatment fully explained; hundreds have been cured by him after they have suffered years.

We give a free examination and send book and colored plates on application. Any person with good reference can secure treatment from us until cured before paying for his case.

REAL CREED OF MORMONS.

Clear Statement of Faith and of Practices.

Authority in the Church and Its Government.

The Religion of the Sect in a Nutshell.

[R. L. H., in Boston Transcript.]

While in Salt Lake City I made the acquaintance of Charles W. Penrose. Mr. Penrose, who is a cultured Englishman and one of the most interesting of the Mormon leaders, edits the Deseret News, which is the inspired organ of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. His position is, therefore, like that of Dr. Lyman Abbott in the liberal wing of the Congregational Church or of Dr. Dunning in the conservative branch of that denomination. He is journalist, preacher and theologian. He speaks ex cathedra.

After speaking of the doctrines of the Trinity, faith and repentance, he comes to the birth of "the spirit, by the laying on of hands by authorized persons. Who, then, are authorized? To raise that question brings us squarely in front of the Mormon doctrine of authority. We are sure that Christ conferred authority on the apostles and also upon the seventy, and upon such individuals as the apostles and the seventy might ordain, but when the apostles were put to death, or those whom they had ordained died or fell away from the church, that line of authority ceased. It is my opinion that it ceased when Constantine the Great made Christianity a state religion. I set the date at that point because that was apparently the beginning of the mingling of Paganism with Christianity. Then followed the great apostasy of the churches. St. John speaks of this in the Revelation, where the scarlet woman saw all nations apostasizing. From that time until the coming of the prophet Joseph Smith, there was no true church in existence, though even during that period there were some gleamings of truth shining out upon the world from the various religions of Christendom and from the ethnic faiths.

"I come now to speak of what we call the restoration. It is really the restoration of divine authority, which is the basis of the true church. When John the Baptist came to Joseph Smith he conferred upon him the priesthood of the Order of Aaron. The right of laying on of hands was given to Joseph Smith by Peter, James and John, who had received from Jesus the priesthood of the Order of Melchisedek. The ancient succession was thus restored and there followed an astonishing series of miracles, healings and speakings with tongues, interpretations of tongues, and other manifestations of supernatural power such as had marked the establishment of the Apostolic Church.

"As we believe in present-day miracles, so we also believe in present-day revelation. The baptized receive the spirit of revelation, which means a personal revelation to each individual in regard to himself and his own personal affairs. Present-day revelations for the church are given to the president only. It is difficult to explain in just what ways revelations are received. They come sometimes in dreams, sometimes in the visitation of spirits from the other world, but as frequently they are the unmistakable inner conviction of the mind and conscience of the believer.

"Although we believe that God still reveals himself to his children from day to day, we have nevertheless several written standards of faith. They are first of all the King James Bible, then the Book of Mormon, after that the Doctrines and Covenants, and last of all the book called 'The Pearl of Great Price.' All else is mere personal opinion. Such beliefs, for instance, as that Christ had three wives or that God is a married man, are personal opinions rather than authorized church doctrines.

"At this point it is relevant to speak of the order of our priesthood, for we hold that our priesthood is organized upon the pattern revealed by God himself. We are ruled by the first presidency, consisting of the first president and his two counselors. They represent the Trinity. These three are one in sentiment. Next below them stand the twelve apostles. The oldest ordained is the president of the twelve. That body equals in its power the three members of the first presidency. If the president of the church dies, then the first presidency dissolves and the twelve apostles are the presiding body. That body has the power to set in order all the offices in the church; therefore, when it is manifested of the spirit to the first presidency of the twelve that the first presidency has to be reorganized, they must reorganize it. Usually the president of the twelve is chosen as the president of the church. He selects his two counselors and the vacancies in the twelve are filled by the choice of other men, and the order is preserved intact.

"In connection with the twelve apostles is the body of seventy, presided over by seven of its number. There are over 120 of these bodies of seventy. Each seventy is presided over by seven of its number. All these bodies of seventy with their presidents are presided over by the first seven presidents of the seventy. The functions of the seventy are to travel and preach the gospel in all the world under the direction of the twelve apostles. There are high priests and elders, who are local ministers at home. All these are the Melchisedek priesthood, of which apostleship is the fullness. Next comes the lesser or Aaronic priesthood, which is an appendage to the greater or Melchisedek priesthood. The chief officer of this priesthood is the bishop. The other officers are priests, teachers and deacons. These are organized into quorums, twelve deacons forming a quorum or council, bers. Twenty-four teachers form a quorum, presided over by three of the members. Forty-eight priests form a quorum, presided over by a bishop and two counsellors, and also have the oversight of the teachers and deacons. Ninety-six elders form a quorum, presided over by three of the number. Besides, there are auxiliary societies. One is the relief society, composed of matrons, each society having a president and two counsellors, there being a society of this sort in every ward. There is also a young men's and young ladies' mutual improvement society, each having a president and two counsellors. Then come our primary association for young children, our Sunday-schools, one in every ward, and lastly our musical organizations.

"With similar care we have divided our territory. Every settlement has one or more wards. Stakes, as we call them, are groups of settlements generally organized on county lines and presided over by a president and two counsellors with a high council composed of twelve high priests. All the stakes of Zion with their officers are presided over by the first president of the church. Each presiding officer in the church, in the stake, or in the ward is presented periodically before the body of the assembled Mormon church for acceptance or rejection by its members. In every stake of Zion there is a stake president for each of the auxiliary societies, also a church stake presidency over the stake presidency.

"Now let me begin to lead you along the line of thought which will make clear to you our belief in polygamy. The first thing to understand is our doctrine of the experience of the soul. We believe that every spirit of man or woman was in the beginning with the Father. We teach that Jesus was the first born in the spirit and became the only begotten in the flesh, and a body was prepared for him especially. Bodies are prepared for the soul according to the times before appointed, and a work was from the beginning set for each to do.

"We emphasize the fact that marriage was designed by God as the means whereby tabernacles should be furnished for the preëxistent spirits, and we believe that those tabernacles should be the best that can be had. Presently you will see more clearly why we believe in polygamy. For it is not enough to say that polygamy will bring into the world a greater number of children. It is also a divine institution modeled by God himself in the very beginning. Two steps are necessary to prove this. Note first that when Eve was brought and given to Adam there was no such thing in this world as death. That union was therefore an eternal union. The words of the marriage service, 'until death do us part,' had not yet been thought of. The first marriage was what we call a celestial marriage, and the atonement of Christ restores just that relation. Now for the second step. Suppose that a man and a woman are thus married, for time and eternity by the authority of God, and suppose that they are sealed by divine ordinances. Then suppose that the woman dies. Plainly the husband is left free to take another wife. This second wife is also sealed for time and eternity. Therefore when that man awakes in paradise he is sealed to two women. Hence there must be plural marriage in heaven, and if it is right in heaven it is right on earth.

"But we need not search the depths of philosophy or theology for sanction for plural marriage, for it is based on the nature of things. There are more women than men in the world, and every woman ought to be wife and mother. We respect the right of a woman to be free in her choice of a mate. And it was our teaching—I say 'was' because I do not admit that polygamous marriages are being contracted now—that no man should take a second wife unless he had received the full permission of the first wife to do so. When you ask me to tell how polygamy originated amongst us I reply it began with the revelation received by Joseph Smith in the year 1842, and publicly proclaimed by him in the year 1852.

"It only remains now for me to explain our belief in the state of the soul in the future life. We do not teach that the wicked shall be everlastingly punished, but we do teach a doctrine of everlasting punishment. God is eternal and his law is eternal and his punishment is eternally ready for the transgressor; but that is not saying that the transgressor forever remains in that punishment. On the other hand, he goes out of it finally to enjoy the bliss of paradise. Punishment we believe is educational and corrective. Our idea of death is the spirit leaving the body. There are two parts of the spiritual world. After death the good associate and the evil associate. All are capable of instruction and progress, of believing or rejecting the truth, of repenting or rebelling, of obedience or disobedience. God's servants preach to those in darkness.

"Furthermore, we believe in vicarious baptism for the unredeemed dead. That is because baptism is an earthly ordinance and, though necessary to salvation, cannot be performed in the other world. All will rise from the dead, but the first will be those who are in Christ. They will enter into the celestial glory, which we call the glory of the sun. It is a condition, not a place. The good outside of Christ will enter the terrestrial glory, which we call the glory of the moon. The wicked after suffering the justice of God, will come up in the glory of the stars."

After my interview with Mr. Penrose I called upon Mr. A. T. Schroeder, and asked him to comment upon what Mr. Penrose had said. And here is the point I was after. Schroeder hates Mormonism, and what is more, his hatred of it is based upon an accurate understanding of its doctrine and its history. He owns the largest and best library of Mormon literature in the world, and he has patiently studied the Mormon question for many years. So if Mr. Penrose had been giving me a false statement of Mormon teaching I was in a fair way to find it out.

"There," said Schroeder, when I had read him my notes, "is the best, the briefest and the fairest exposition of doctrinal Mormonism I ever saw. Still I must comment here and there upon what Mr. Penrose has told you. When for instance, he says that the doctrine of the motherhood of God or the doctrine of the polygamous marriage of Christ is mere personal opinion, he is beside the fact. To be sure, those ridiculous notions are not to be found in the printed standards of faith, but as they are the opinions of the very highest dignitaries of the church they are regarded as of divine origin."

"Note, too, that when Mr. Penrose tells you that spirit is not immaterial, he is safeguarding his belief in a heaven of carnal pleasure, where the saint becomes lord of a harem peopled by the wives he has accumulated during his earthly life. And again, look sharply at Mr. Penrose's statement that every woman has a right to the best children that can be had. That is what leads to polyandry. When the husband is feeble or in ill health, it is thought perfectly right for his wife to seek another father for her children.

"Furthermore, the teaching of present-day revelation leads logically to the union of church and State. The will of God in regard to political movements is made plain to the president of the Mormon church, and he therefore is thought to be in a better position to govern than is the President of the United States. In spirit, at least, Mormonism is an organized system of treason and rebellion.

"But the most atrocious feature of Mormonism, namely, its doctrine of blood atonement, Mr. Penrose has passed over completely. He did not tell you about the eternal damnation of those who had committed the unforgivable sins of apostasy from the Mormon church or of killing a member of that church. Such offenses, the Mormons said, could be atoned for before God only by shedding the blood of the offenders. To murder such men was to save their souls for eternity. That pleasant practice, for so many years the pastime of Brigham Young and his followers, has since gone out of vogue, but the theory which sanctioned it is still a part of Mormon belief. And observe, please, that the same plea which would condone polygamy on the ground that it is a part of the Mormon religion, would condone the sacred rite of assassination, which is equally a part of that religion."

OBJECT TO YAQUI FAKES.

SONORA CITIZENS INDIGNANT OVER FALSE REPORTS.

Denounce Publication in Los Angeles of Stories that Have no Foundation in Fact—Mexico's Business Interests Injured by Them.

The citizens of the State of Sonora, the city of Hermosillo and other portions of Mexico are indignant over the continued publication in Los Angeles of deliberate "fake" stories concerning alleged Yaqui Indian outbreaks and wars. They have formulated a formal protest, which is signed by many prominent citizens of those parts of Mexico, and have forwarded it to The Times asking that it be published in order "to maintain the good reputation of the entire domain and more especially that of Sonora, as a country entirely safe for travelers and prospectors of all classes." The protest says in part:

"The Los Angeles Examiner has repeatedly printed erroneous and highly injurious statements regarding the Indian situation in this commonwealth, and in its issue of April 27 it repeats the offense in a most glaring manner by the use of sensational headlines on its first page, first column. It is hereby testified to by all undersigned that said journal is not in receipt of any official or any other trustworthy information whatever regarding the Indian difficulties of Sonora.

"From practical knowledge of the entire State, based on a lifetime residence on the part of many of the signers hereto and on years of travel in the very districts alluded to, we are prepared to affirm that life and property at this period are as safe at all times and in all places in Sonora as in California.

"American investment in Sonora aggregates many millions of dollars, and these interests are safeguarded legally and practically to a higher degree, if possible, than in the United States.

"The respective towns and cities of Sonora contain a total population aggregating about 225,000 people. In all of these cities are churches, schools and civic societies, justice is administered and the amenities of civilization are maintained.

"We beg to remind the proprietor of said paper that but a few months ago he traversed the entire railroad area of this State, accompanied by a large number of guests, ladies and gentlemen, aboard a "special train." We feel certain that both he and his guests will testify to the fact that in their entire journey beween Chicago and California and return they were nowhere safer or treated with more courtesy, so far as time permitted, than they received in Sonora.

"The Indian difficulties are not formidable; are entirely within the control of local and State authorities, aided, when required, by Federal troops. Whether a few Indians are necessitating special activity on the part of the troops or not, at all times, now, as in the past, this activity does not affect the commerce or the general welfare of the State of Sonora any more than a brawl among the Indians of the San Jacinto Mountain reservations in Southern California would affect the daily current of life in Los Angeles. But to the stranger abroad, unfamiliar with our situation, such alleged "news" as here protested against, gives the direct impression that the whole fabric of civilization in Sonora is threatened and our whole State overrun with hostile Indians."

A private letter accompanying the protest says that Gen. Don Luis Torres has arrived from the scene. He has read the protest and affirms all therein stated.

The protest is signed by Adolfo Bley, president of the Board of Trade; M. Y. Loaiza, Mayor of Hermosillo; Max Muller, manager of the Banco de Sonora; Ysmael M. Ruiz, manager of the Banco Minero; Cipriano Alvarez, manager of the Banco Occidental; Victor Aguilar, Treasurer of the State; Octavio Torres, Treasurer of the city; Alberto Cubillas, member of the Congress of Sonora; Serafico Robles, secretary of the Supreme Court; M. Pomeroy, manager of the Yaqui Copper Co.; Charles A. Kaiser, Z. O. Stocker, L. P. Serrano, Luis Cambuston, F. E. Monteverde, Tadeo Yruretagoyena. The protest also says that "did time permit, it would be an easy matter to add thousands to the above, but what is given here are representative names and indicative of the entire sentiment of the whole State."

MEDILL'S FORGERY.

An Amusing Story of the Former Editor of the Chicago Tribune.

A characteristic story of the late Joseph Medill, editor and millionaire owner of the Chicago Tribune, is related by Frederick Upham Adams, author of "John Burt" and of other novels, who is now writing the series of instructive articles for the Sunday Times on "How Cities are Governed in Great Britain. In his later years Mr. Medill was slightly deaf and inclined to be absent-minded. On one occasion he assigned Mr. Adams, then a reporter for the Tribune, to an extended and important journey in the interests of the paper. The prospective duties were such that it would be impossible to draw on the home office for money, and it was arranged that Mr. Adams should take with him $1000 in cash.

After discussing the project with much earnestness for an hour or more with his employé, Mr. Medill reached for his check book and began to draw a check for the amount agreed upon. He wrote the date line and then laid aside his pen and resumed an elaboration of the details of the plan, which was one of many of his pet hobbies. Then he wrote the name and the amount, and once more took up the thread of suggestions and instructions. Having apparently exhausted the subject he signed the slip of paper and handed it to Mr. Adams.

"The banks are closed, and you need the money so that you can start tonight," he said, adjusting his ear trumpet. "Take the check down to my cashier and he will cash it for you. My credit is quite good on this paper."

With a grim smile at his jest, Mr. Medill turned to his work. Mr. Adams presented the check to the cashier, who examined it closely, and then returned it.

"I know of no such person, and cannot cash that check," he said.

"It is Mr. Medill's personal check, and I must have the money tonight," declared the surprised newspaper man.

"You'll have trouble raising money on that check," returned the other. "Take a look at it."

Mr. Adams glanced at the amount and then at the signature. The former was accurate but the signature read "Joseph Adams." A few moments later he again stood by Mr. Medill's desk.

"What's the matter now?" asked the great editor. "Hasn't he that much cash on hand?"

"He says the check is of no value," said Mr. Adams. "He refused to cash it."

"Won't cash my check!" exclaimed Mr. Medill in amazement. "Let me see it."

He adjusted his glasses and studied the little piece of paper for a moment. Then a smile came to his face; a smile mingled of amusement, chagrin and reflection.

"I have committed forgery!" he said. "We must keep this out of the papers. I'm growing old, my boy, growing old. 'Joseph Adams!' 'Joseph Adams!' That's pretty good! Here's another check. Ask him if he knows who signed this one."

His Turn Would Come.

Former Supt. Byrne of New York, who had the friendship of several influential Wall street men, did not stand high in the estimation of an operator who thrived in the days before it became unpleasant for "get-rich-quick" schemes. His home had been robbed, but the theives not being quickly apprehended, he visited Mulberry street to "call down" the superintendent.

"There should be no trouble," said he, "in landing these crooks. It takes a thief to catch a thief."

"Don't be impatient," said Byrne quietly; "you must wait your turn."—[Denver Republican.

FINEST DRAPERIES

From France we have received a very choice assortment of Imperial Velours. We imported them direct so that we saved all middlemen's profits. The line is the largest on the Pacific Coast. The goods sell at $2.50 and $3.00 a yard, but they are worth more. The colorings do honor to the best French dyers.

Jasper cloth is a new fabric with the new shadow effects in printing.

They can only be described by reference to the warp printed taffetas which had such soft, warm blended colorings. The Jasper cloth comes in large designs and therefore in most beautiful effects. They are suitable for dainty parlors and are used for walls, side drapes or openings. Two grades at $4.00 and $6.00, the latter containing more silk.

Orsini Velours are two-toned in their effect, but in reality are solid colors. A brocade effect is given the fabric. They are for heavy draperies and nothing more elegant can be imagined. There is one piece of old red and a piece of tan that are beyond comparison. The prices range from $5.00 to $7.00 per yard.

New Art Cloths are so called for the want of a better name. The fabric itself is of a weave similar to matelasse. The threads used in the designs are carried along the back in a separately woven cloth until the pattern demands their insertion in the face of the fabric, thus the fabric is double having no loose threads or unsightly backs. The colorings and designs are of the "New Art" sort. $1.75 a yard.

Madras de Chine, a material having a solid center in dainty colors and in a beautiful silk finish. The borders are in madras designs and are new in effect. This is a charming fabric for over-drapes, small windows, glass doors, etc. $1.25 a yard.

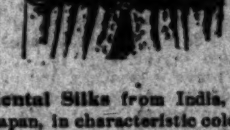
Extraordinary Cretonnes are here in prices ranging from 50c to $3.00 a yard. The name of this fabric is old, but every design is a new beauty. The effects are new and different. They come in widths from 30 to 50 inches suitable for all purposes.

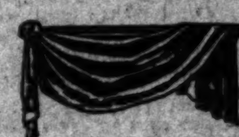
Lattice Cloth is a new material used with excellent effect in combination with Arts and Crafts furnishings, or where simplicity is desired. It is useful for all sorts of draperies, hangings and curtains. Plain colors only. 90c a yard.

Tapestries for walls are greatly in favor. They are a little more expensive than good wall paper, but the effect is worth the price. We are showing an almost endless variety of these goods in all grades and prices.



Oriental Silks from India, China and Japan, in characteristic colors and designs, also in modern designs, are here in great abundance. They are all genuine imported goods.

Arabian curtains have arrived in profusion. The new line includes grades from $10.00 to $50.00 per pair. The designs are of course, new and different from what we have before shown. We think this the best line we have ever owned.



English Cluny curtains have also arrived in abundance. $5.00 to $25.00 a pair. The new line is up to the Baker standard and includes a vast number of charming new effects.

Frances Marie is the daughter of Dr. E. W. Knowlton, the discoverer of Danderine, 260 Garfield boul., Chicago. The Finest Level Valley Land in California
All Under Water of Turlock Canals and Laterals

Ceres, once the center of the great grain shipments from this section, is a bright little town of several hundred people, with good schools, churches and no saloons. It is the center of the Calimyrna Fig growing section, an industry that is productive of big returns. We offer the following, subject to previous sale:

No. 1 SMYRNA PARK

Smyrna Park is to be one of the great shipping centers in the State for the famous Calimyrna fig, which is sure to bring large profits to those who are now planting it.

Many acres of this fig have already been planted, and before long extensive fig-packing facilities will be established in Ceres, so that an easy and profitable market will be secured to the fig growers.

We have for sale several hundred acres of choice land in the immediate vicinity of Smyrna Park and Ceres which we offer at reasonable prices and on easy terms. Smyrna Park has been so thoroughly advertised by its own people who believe in its future that the colony is pretty well known east and west.

No. 3 MISSIONVALE COLONY

This fine tract, formerly known as the Grattan property, comprises 1,600 acres of first-class alfalfa and fruit land. It is situated on the Santa Fe R. R. a mile and a half from the Elmdale Station. Some 200 acres have already been sold, and a movement is under way to establish a large and prosperous colony here during the coming season.

No. 2 UNION COLONY

This tract comprises 928 acres situated 2¼ miles south of Ceres, and 2 miles west of Keyes. A large amount of money has been expended in preparing this property for Colony purposes, and it would be hard to find a tract so well laid out and so well watered. Ditches are made to take the water to every 40 acres in the tract. The soil is a rich sandy loam, splendidly adapted to the culture of alfalfa and fruit.

No. 4 OUR HOME ACRE AND SMALL FRUIT PROPOSITION

Intensive farming is exceedingly profitable in California. A half acre of Gardena dewberries produced fruit last season which the owner, Mr. Gray, of Gardena, sold for $775. The phenomenal berry and the mammoth blackberry are also enormously productive and profitable.

We have set apart three 20-acre tracts, in the original Smyrna Park for small home lots of one, two or three acres, which can be devoted to homes and profitable berry raising. If anyone has a small income and desires a home in a most desirable community, with land enough to busy the owner in raising small fruits, squabs and poultry, we can furnish him what he wants. The price of these home lots ranges from $75 to $150 an acre.

NAVAL GUNNERY.

[illegible] Target Practice Recorded [illegible] Crews on the U. S. Battleships.

[illegible] most marvelous feats in [illegible] was accomplished on [illegible] in Manila Bay, by a gun [illegible] United States battleship [illegible] while at target practice. [illegible] of shots fired that day [illegible]'s thirteen-inch guns [illegible] world's record up to eight [illegible] hits in five minutes [illegible], but this record stood [illegible] M. Gaut, coxswain, and [illegible], gunner's mate, aimed [illegible] the forward turret of the Wisconsin. The target was at a distance of 1600 yards and the ship was under way at a speed of six knots an hour. Ten shots were fired in five minutes and forty seconds, nine of them piercing the bull's-eye. This remarkable piece of work doubled the previous world's record for firing in this class and established a new mark which is likely to stand untouched for some time to come.

C. H. Neubert, gunner's mate, has, it is claimed, shown more skill in the training of a turret than any other man in the navy. During the entire target practice Neubart trained the turret, firing fifty-one shots, not one of which passed either to the right or left of the target. When it is understood that in the short space of 340 seconds nearly six tons of steel in the form of projectiles passed through a single gun fired by nearly two tons of powder, in ten different charges, all of which in that space of time was brought from magazines forty-five feet below the guns, the efficiency of the turret and handling-room crews of the Wisconsin may be better realized. The men have been under the training of Lieut. Vogelgesang, whose theories they carried successfully into practice. As alll the other classes of guns on the Wisconsin made better records than those of the Alabama, which held the record, the Wisconsin put in a claim for the pennant for battleships.

Another record for naval gunnery was made recently on the battleship Kearsarge, during practice off the harbor of Pensacola, Fla. The left gun crew in the after superimposed turret of the vessel scored ten successive bull's-eyes in five minutes with an eight-inch gun, discharged at a target 1600 yards distant, while the ship was moving at the rate of ten miles an hour. Two gun-pointers took part in this event. The first one, Boatswain's Mate Young, fired six shots and made six hits in two and a half minutes, or 2.4 shots per minute, beating the previous best performance, on the New York, of four hits, at the rate of two per minute. The second pointer, Gunner's Mate Koester, fired four shots, making four hits in two and a half minutes, or 1.6 per minute. Some of the ten shots were only seventeen seconds apart. The crew was trained by Ensign D. Pratt Mannix, under the supervision of Lieut. J. W. L. Clement. Both these officers have made a special and exhaustive study of naval gunnery.

A crew on the battleship Texas very lately made a new world's record for 12-inch guns, having scored eleven hits in ten minutes.—[Leslie's Weekly.

Largest Treasury Warrant.

The largest warrant ever drawn upon the United States treasury will figure in the settlement of the Panama Canal transfer, when the $40,000,000 will be paid by this government next week. It was lerned definitely today that it had been virtually decided to pay over the whole amount in a lump sum, and that the Paris syndicate, which has already paid the amount to the canal shareholders, would collect the warrant in the regular way in a few days. In other words, the warrant is now in course of collection, being probably on the water, bound for New York.

This will give Secretary Shaw the distinction of affixing his signature to the largest single warrant ever issued in the course of government business. It will also rank in the opinion of New York bankers as the largest sum ever transferred by the interchange of a single slip of paper. When the $20,000,000 was remitted to Spain at the close of the Spanish-American War, four treasury warrants of $5,000,000 each were used. They were paid over at intervals of a week or more to the French Ambassador, by James Stillman, president of the National City Bank of New York. In that instance gold was not used as a medium of exchange, although metal covering the full amount was exported to Europe within two months after the transaction was completed.—[New York Post.

How Cities are Governed in Great Britain.

MANCHESTER AND GLASGOW.

BY FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS.
Author of "John Burt" and "The Kidnapped Millionaires."

THOSE employers who refuse recognition to trade unions and all of those who are concerned in the world-wide struggle between capital and labor will be interested in learning of the relations which exist in Manchester. That municipality has not as yet organized a works department, but the constant strife between the council and the contractors makes the formation of such a department inevitable in the near future.

About a year ago the city council passed an act commonly termed the "Fair Contracts Clause." It was modeled from enactments passed and enforced in other cities of Great Britain, and it called forth the vigorous but unavailing opposition of the contractors of Manchester and Salford, which city occupies the same relation to Manchester that Broklyn did to New York before their consolidation. The "Fair Contracts Clause" is worthy of exact quoting and reads as follows:

"Contractors tendering for executing work under this council must be paying the standard rate of wages to the whole of their work people, and observing the hours of labor recognized by the local organized bodies of workers in the various trades affected in the districts where such work is being executed. No tender shall be accepted from any firm which prohibits its work people from joining trades societies. Should the council have, in its opinion, reasonable grounds for believing that the above conditions are not being complied with, the contractor shall be required to produce proof (to the satisfaction of the council) of his compliance with said conditions. The contractor shall not assign or underlet the contract, or any part of it, or subcontract, except with the consent of the council, and upon such conditions as it may see fit; if the tenderer at the time of tendering states his desire to sublet any portion of the work not usually done by him, the council will consent, provided that the subcontractor is a person approved of by it. The principal contractor shall be responsible, however, for all work done, and for its being carried out under the same conditions as if executed by himself. Clauses embodying the various points herein mentioned shall be inserted in all contracts, and contractors shall be required to signify their assent to them in writing. Failure to comply with any of the conditions set forth in such clauses shall leave it within the power of the council to cancel the contract."

It is not my province to discuss the justice or iniquity of this enactment, and it is mentioned only as evidence of the power and standing attained by organized labor in Great Britain. The act quoted passed the council with little opposition, and its provisions are rigidly enforced.

Manchester is about to establish a municipal telephone plant in co-operation with Salford and a dozen or more towns and villages surrounding. A joint board has been formed consisting of eighteen members, of which ten are appointed by Manchester, five by Salford and one each by the trustees of the towns of Stockport, Eccles and Stretford. In the same proportion these several cities and towns will contribute to the cost of the enterprise, and share in its profits or losses. It has been agreed that when the undertaking shows a profit exceeding 5 per cent, after defraying interest, paying into the sinking fund and allowing for depreciation, such profit shall go to a reduction of telephone charges.

This co-operative scheme establishes an interesting precedent. It may lead to the formation of "municipal trusts" for the operation of electric railways. There are districts in Great Britain where the neighboring cities might with advantage consolidate their lines and establish an intercommunicating system extending through scores of smaller towns and villages which now are without such a service. The day may come when the inefficient steam railways may be confronted with the competition of "The Consolidated Municipal Tramways of Great Britain," with a network of tracks following every important highway in the United Kingdom. And there is more of truth than jest in this forecast. The municipalities have a monopoly of enterprise in these islands, and it is impossible to place a limit on their constructive ambition.

Manchester purchased the tramways within its limits in 1875, and immediately began to lay new tracks. It leased them to a private company, and up to the date of the expiration of the leases in 1900 the city had received an income of more than $2,000,000 from this source. In that year it decided to take over the operation of the lines and to install electrical traction in the place of the horses used by the private corporation.

The city now operates 131 miles of track, one-third of which are outside of the city limits and leased to Manchester by the various local authorities. Arrangements have been made for a large extension of the mileage within the city. The capital outlay at present amounts to about $7,500,000 and under the charter its borrowing power is practically unlimited. There yet remain a few miles of privately operated tramway in the city, but it is inevitable that these will soon pass to the control of the municipal corporation.

The whole of the work of reconstruction within the city was carried out by the department's workman, without the intervention of contractors. The consulting engineer's estimate was $2,000,000, but the city did the work and saved $350,000. Contractors asked for $1,000,000 to install the overhead equipment, but the department executed the work in first class style for $735,000.

The Manchester Corporation Tramways, when completed, will unquestionably excel any system in Great Britain. Liverpool will not agree with this assertion, and neither will Glasgow, but a careful investigation of the three plants convinces me that Manchester is entitled to the greater credit. There is now erecting a modern car building shop, in which will be manufactured and repaired not only the cars but the motors and all of the devices appertaining to street railway rolling stock. General Manager J. M. McElroy is the head of this great department, and it is his settled policy to construct a plant which shall be almost absolutely independent of outside producers.

The car sheds are the largest in Europe, the Queen's Road shed having accommodations for 450 cars. It is an enormous building and is fitted with appliances selected after an inspection of the best plants in New York, Chicago, Pittsburg, Washington and other American and continental cities which employ up-to-date methods. In it are club rooms for the conductors and motormen. A boxing instructor trains them in the art of handling rowdies and other unruly passengers. There are reading rooms, libraries, baths and shower baths and heating conveniences, so that the men can warm their luncheons and make tea or coffee. None of these are expensive luxuries, and the items charged against the receipts are so small that they do not arouse the resentment of taxpayers. The men work ten hours less a week than they did when employed by the private company, and they also receive more pay for the shorter time. There have been no strikes and no lockouts.

There is no civil service system, as we understand it in the United States. When men are needed they are selected from the most promising applicants who have attended the schools of instruction. In these schools, motormen and conductors are thoroughly drilled in handling all of the standard devices in use in the United States and Great Britain. There is no formal placing of a name on the available list, and the foreman or superintendent uses his judgment in choosing employés. It seems to work fully as well as our more elaborate civil service boards, with their expensive staffs and formal examinations.

Various types of cars are used. Several lines are served entirely with cars modeled from those used in the United States. The double-deck tram is the more popular, and every effort is being made to remedy its defects and to avoid the danger which attends reaching and leaving the upper deck. The illustration shows cars of the American type standing in the Queen's Road sheds.

The balance sheet of the last fiscal year shows that the Manchester municipal tramways earned above all expenses the sum of $650,000. The rental from the private company had been $115,000 and the decided increase seemed to justify the policy of those who urged that it was expedient to introduce electrical traction, reduce the rates of fare and substitute municipal for private control. The Tramways Department contributed $150,000 to the taxpayers and placed the balance to the credit of the reserve and sinking fund.

In taking leave of Manchester's institutions, I must record my admiration and respect for the men who are responsible for their success. From street laborers to honorable Aldermen all seem actuated by a genuine pride in their work and in their city. No growing Western town is inspired by a higher local patriotism. The voters of Manchester believe in their city, in its present and its future. Men of wealth unhesitatingly respond to requests from the municipal departments for money with bonds as security. As a rule the city treasurer will redeem on demand, any of these evidences of indebtedness, though not compelled to do so. The municipality performs the functions of a bank, in which citizens deposit their savings, draw interest on them, the funds thus deposited being invested in reproductive investments. But the time has arrived when we must journey across the Scotch border and study the municipal wonders of its metropolis, Glasgow.

It is a mystery to me how the Scot has had thrust on him a reputation for predominant traits of hard-headed conservatism. In any country where he is of the majority he is the most radical of human beings. Once he has figured to his own satisfaction that there is material or financial advantage in introducing a new system, he bends every energy to the overthrow of conflicting institutions, no matter how old or venerated.

These "conservative and hard-headed Scotch" migrated to New Zealand. They proceeded to exterminate or convert the natives, and long since have finished that task. They invented and installed an experimental system of government which has astounded the world by its audacity. They put into actual operation a combination of the socialism of Karl Marx and opposed to it the individualism of Henry George. Others quarreled over theories; they tested them on a gigantic scale.

While I am writing this paper, news comes from England that the House of Commons has passed to a third reading a bill which proposes to tax out of existence, "the unearned increment on land." To those who are familiar with the "single-tax" theory to which Henry George devoted his life and talents this phrase has an ominous sound. Its enforcement would sound the death knell to land speculation and in all probability put an end to the landlordism on which is based the aristocracy of Great Britain. The House of Lords will probably defeat the bill, but it promises to become the weapon which will hammer to fragments the institution which is responsible for the permanence and sharp alignment of the two great classes, the rich and the poor of the United Kingdom.

And who was responsible for the agitation which has made it possible to force so revolutionary a measure through the ruling legislative body in Great Britain? The "conservative and hard-headed Scotch." For a generation the famous John Ferguson of Glasgow has been agitating for this and for other radical reforms. At this inception his crusade was laughed at, but Bailie Ferguson paused not to listen to sneers. He was a man of wealth and of tireless energy. He wrote pamphlets on land reform and on temperance. He carried a bible in one pocket, a copy of "Progress and Poverty," in the other. He called conventions, made speeches and converted and recently had the satisfaction of attending a national convention with accredited delegates from the great cities of the kingdom. The Scotch people are practically unanimous for this drastic reform, and in the bill now before the Parliament, the provisions for Scotland are far more radical, and are in fact retroactive.

This may be a new view of the Scottish character, but it is fortified by more proof than that just cited. It offers an explanation of the undisputable fact that Glasgow is the pioneer of municipal public ownership, not only in Great Britain, but in the modern civilized world.

Glasgow is an old town but a young city. It was founded hundreds of years ago, but it was not until the last century that it began to force its way into the group of the world's great centers. There are American cities which justly are proud of their rapid growth and advancement, and whose citizens believe that their records cannot be duplicated outside of this republic. They will be undeceived when they study the figures which reveal Glasgow's phenomenal advancement in population. In 1750 it stood at less than 25,000. In 1811 it was 100,000; in 1831, 200,000; in 1851, 329,000; in 1871, 478,000, and in 1881 it had reached a total of 674,000. Today, within a district covering less than twenty square miles, there is a population of 800,000, and the city proper, with suburbs, numbers more then 1,000,000.

When one reflects that the corporate limits of Glasgow include only 20 square miles, as against 192 for Chicago, 129 for Philadelphia, 70 for Washington, and 308 for New York, it must be apparent that the Scotch metropolis has been confronted with problems unknown in this country.

Glasgow was the leader in blazing the way to municipal progress and triumphs. Long before the cities of the United States had projected the vast schemes which have made them great despite natural handicaps, Glasgow had transformed a purling brook into one of the most important navigable highways in the world. Where huge ocean liners now are fashioned from steel and oak, the famous Clyde was a brook which a boy might ford. There are persons living who remember when the town was inland, and when no one dreamed a day would come when it would rank as a seaport of dominating importance. Before the men were born who carved a way from Manchester to the sea, Glasgow had accomplished that stupendous task and set the pace in municipal enterprise.

If there be one lesson which a certain class of our people should learn, it is that foresight, enterprise and ambition are not traits absolutely indigenous to American soil. The constant opposite reiteration of this unfounded claim breeds a false pride and gives rise to a confidence which may be misplaced. We undoubtedly are a great people, but, to use a pat colloquialism, "there are others." Unless these articles intimate that perhaps there are features and institutions on the other side of the water which are worthy of study, if not of imitation or adoption, they are written in vain.

When democracy was bequeathed to Glasgow in 1833, it moved forward by leaps and bounds. Prior to that time the city was governed by the guilds and the incorporated trades of the city. It was as if New York now were ruled by delegates selected by the Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Labor. The guilds were composed of the merchants, and they had a slight numerical preponderance over the craftsmen. But all this was swept away by the rising spirit of democracy, which impelled Parliament in 1833 to pass the reform burgs act, which provided that towns should be governed by delegates elected directly by the taxpayers. And in passing I will say that today, not only in Scotland, but in all parts of the kingdom, suffrage is reserved to those who pay taxes or rent as a householder. It may be wrong to exclude those who cannot thus qualify, but it works so well as to cast a doubt on the wisdom of our more promiscuous system.

Within the memory of many now living, a resident of Glasgow was prohibited by law from opening a shop for selling shoes unless he belonged to the Cordwainers Incorporation, or from making and selling bread unless by birth or purchase a member of the Bakers' Incorporation. Parliament put an end to this in 1846.

Glasgow began to deepen the Clyde in 1759, though abortive attempts had been made before. Ten years later it had secured 7 feet of water at the "Broomielaw," the present business center of the city. From that date its efforts have been unceasing, and the municipality has ever been the controlling factor of what is now known as the "Clyde Navigation Trust." There has been expended in this enterprise by the municipality in co-operation with private interests, a total of not much less than $100,000,000. It is a favorite saying in the Scotch metropolis, "Glasgow made the Clyde—the Clyde made Glasgow."

Those whose timidity is aroused over the tendency of municipalities to absorb new powers and embark on new enterprises do not seem to realize that the movement is a perfectly natural one and that the present evolutionary rate of acceleration is no faster, and in most instances slower, than it has been in preceding periods. The story of Glasgow is the more startling, but the magician has been at work in every city of consequence. A century ago Glasgow was supplied with drinking water from wells. There was one well to each thousand of the population, but from where was New York obtaining its water at the same time? The man who first proposed that Glasgow should supply its inhabitants with water drawn from pure sources and who argued that this was a duty the city owed to its inhabitants was a bolder reformer than his successor, who claimed it was proper that the municipality should provide transportation facilities.

Cities have become great in proportion as they have executed undertakings which private interests might have done, but which they refused or neglected to do. Less than a century ago the housewives of Glasgow threw slops into the streets from the windows, and the only regulation governing this practice was one which cautioned the thrower to give warning to the pedestrian. There were no public schools. It did not occur to the authorities that the town was under the slightest obligation to provide and maintain public parks. Street paving and cleaning were matters of private option. Those who urge that the extension of municipal enterprise limits the activity of the individual should reflect that the individual made small use of his opportunities in the years prior to the time when the municipalities substituted collective for private enterprise.

In the two papers which follow I shall attempt to present the facts concerning the public institutions of Glasgow, the most remarkable of all the cities in its display of civic enterprise and initiative.

Russia Rules by the Snow.

The world has moved so quickly of late that it is difficult to realize that a century ago Russia occupied the first place among European countries for the cheapness and rapidity with which the land transport of merchandise could be effected.

The facilities for traveling and for the conveyance of goods provided by the sledge—then the easiest of all modes of transport by land—gave Russia for half the year as great a physical advantage over most other Continental countries in this direction as Great Britain possessed by her countless roads over the waves. Visitors to Moscow a century ago recorded their amazement at finding when dining with wealthy nobles in midwinter fresh fruit and vegetables that had been brought by rapid sledge transport from the South, luxuries that no money could at any time have purchased in Paris, Berlin or even London.

To the sledge road alone Russia owed the possibility of her rapid advance to the East, in which her empire had increased at the average rate of a little over 80 kilometres a day since the reign of Peter the Great.

The Russians gliding eastward over the snow, won the grand empire of Northwest and Eastern Asia just as the Anglo-Saxons, ploughing their way westward through the ocean, won theirs on the other side of the Atlantic and both now are face to face upon the eastern and western shores of the Pacific.—[From "Russian Life in Town and Country," by F. The Reporter Fled.

The visit of Marquis Ito to America recalls an incident in which the Marquis's polished chief secreatry and an inexperienced St. Paul newspaper reporter were the chief stars. It happened when Ito was in the United State in 1901. The secretary, a member of the Japanese House of Lords and a suave diplomat, who was educated in English and German universities, received the reporter, who was sent by his city editor to "cover" Ito's visit to St. Paul.

"Me newspaper man. Me writee news. Me heardee Marquis velly ill. He better today. You savve?" began the reporter to the secretary's amazement. But the latter was equal to the occasion.

"Me savve," he said gravely. "Marquis he no better. Velly blad. Catchee cold. Doctor him no lettee him leave bled today. You savve?"

The interview proceeded this way, but at its termination, the secretary, with a twinkle in his eye, remarked: "The Marquis is greatly fatigued by his arduous journey, but——"

[AUTHORIZED AND REQUESTED ANNOUNCEMENT.]

JAMES B. LANKERSHIM, A SENATORIAL POSSIBILITY.

Announces That He May Be a Candidate for Senator Bard's Toga.

The name of Col. James B. Lankershim has been mentioned in connection with other aspirants for the United States Senate to succeed Senator Bard. Col. Lankershim is well known in the community, he has resided in Southern California for over thirty-six years, and has been actively and to a large extent interested in its enterprises and development. The hesitancy of other candidates has encouraged him to throw down the gauntlet and enter the Senatorial lists. In the following language he has briefly but forcibly defined his position. He was asked:

"Col. Lankershim, it is reported that you will be a candidate for the United States Senate to succeed Senator Bard. Is this true?"

"I am very desirous of being a Senator from California, and if I continue to be encouraged by the favorable expressions of my fellow citizens my name will probably be presented to the Legislature for its consideration. But I want to say once and for all that I will go to the Legislature on the merits of the case, as the lawyers say. You know that it has been claimed that the United States Senatorship from California has often been a matter of purchase. I do not believe this. I have no such base opinion of our legislators past, present or future. But if it is ever to be an honor to be auctioned off, I would not be a bidder. Of course, any man should be willing to pay all that is necessary for legitimate expenses and to maintain the dignity of the office, but further than this money should not be a factor."

"What is the Senatorial situation as you observe it?"

"The strongest position in the contest will be the equitable demand of Southern California that one of the United States Senators should come from the south. The force of this argument increases daily, as the importance of this section increases in population and production. There is one condition that must be emphasized and anticipated.

THE PANAMA CANAL IS OURS AT LAST

WATCH SAN DIEGO GROW

THE SAN DIEGO AND EASTERN RAILROAD

Her new direct Eastern road—is now a certainty. A careful investigation into the railroad situation develops the fact that the final surveys are being rapidly completed and the construction will certainly commence this year—PROBABLY IN AUGUST.

THE BIG STEEL PLANT CORPORATION

Is pushing its organization rapidly forward and will start its construction as soon as possible.

The wealthiest and most successful business men and bankers of San Diego and Los Angeles and Pasadena are among the prime movers in both these latter big enterprises and some of the heaviest steel men and railroad people of Ohio and Pittsburgh are associated with them. The United States government itself is backing the canal. So it is safe to assert that

SAN DIEGO IS THE CITY AND NOW IS THE TIME.

It was predicted a year ago by a prominent Los Angeles banker that Los Angeles business men would hasten to establish in San Diego and that thousands of Los Angeles people would locate [illegible] immediately the Panama Canal and the San Diego Eastern Railroad were certainties. The prediction is already being realized, for only a few days ago a new National Bank was established in San Diego [illegible] with Los Angeles bankers, business men and capitalists at its head. Other very prominent Los Angeles men are deeply interested in both the steel mills and the new railroad, and a steady stream of home seekers and others seeking business locations is flowing into San Diego from Los Angeles.

IT IS NOT A BOOM—but the city is at least getting the growth that was due it. Values are steadily rising, and a few years hence will see here a city of 100,000 people doing a splendid manufacturing business and with lines of commerce radiating to every quarter of the globe; by steamship lines to every part of the Orient; to the Eastern States and Europe by a number of direct transcontinental routes and via the new Panama Canal [illegible] water route.

It is a golden outlook for San Diego.

We do not seek to inspire the Boom Fever. What we wish to suggest is that NOW IS THE BEST TIME that you can possibly get a small investment in San Diego, or a home site, if you buy for a home. Get your property in San Diego NOW. Get it WHILE IT IS STILL LOW. Get the benefit of ALL the rise in value that will take place—is already taking place—not only part of it.

$10.00 SECURES A GOOD LOT IN SAN DIEGO.

In the Pacific Beach addition. Prices on these lots range from $65 to $150.00. All are good lots. Pacific Beach is the most beautiful residential portion of San Diego. It is on car line (steam motor, which [illegible] trolley soon) has City water, telephone service, and there are over sixty fine residences on the tract. The Huntington rapid transit Electric line when it reaches San Diego will traverse the tract from end to [illegible]

Everyone knows what prices good lots at the beach additions near Los Angeles have gone to in the last three years. These Pacific Beach addition lots have the advantage of this feature in addition [illegible] Follow the beaches. There you will make your money. These lots are the best small investment in San Diego, for our prices are very low now, and the values are certain to rise more rapidly than any other [illegible] of the City.

NOTICE:—We are not in any way connected with the property being advertised as "MISSION BAY HEIGHTS." Although we have a large amount of land adjoining that addition and lying between it and [illegible] communication by car line or water mains we do not care to sell that class of property. However if any of our clients wish to buy that kind of lots AFTER SEEING THEM we will sell them lots there at $20 each. [illegible] avowed purpose of the Los Angeles party advertising said proposition to "get a lot of cheap land and cut under FOLSOM BROS. & CO. and get the benefit of their advertising" we have no compunction in [illegible] statement.

FOLSOM BROS. & CO. have within one year bought lands and suburban additions in San Diego now valued at nealy half a million dollars; these include over a mile of magnificent Ocean Frontage, two [illegible] two hotels, several houses, work teams, horses, carriages, etc. They have built a number of houses and other buildings, graded streets and done other things too numerous to mention in the upbuilding [illegible] respectfully refer to any city or county official or bank in San Diego.

Our motto is "SEE YOUR PROPERTY." For a short time longer to bonafide purchasers—we will pay your fare to San Diego to see the lots you are getting.

$65.00 to $150.00 buys a Pacific Beach lot today. Payments will be accepted in monthly installments of ten dollars each.

[illegible] Bard has accomplished and [illegible] standing that he has attained [illegible] his seat in the Senate of [illegible] States on March 5, 1900.

WAS UNHERALDED.

[illegible] Bard came to the Senate [illegible] an unknown man. Other [illegible] came here with reputations [illegible] preceding them. Some [illegible]ced beforehand as re[illegible]; some come with rep[illegible] profound knowledge of law and of the Constitution of the United States; some come heralded as extremely astute political managers; some come with great business reputations, which they have built up by years of toil and industry; some come announced as extremely rich men. Senator Bard came almost unknown. Between the time of his election in the extra session of the California Legislature, and his arrival in Washington, it did become known here that he was a successful business man, a man of clean habits of life, and that was all. When he reached here it was discovered by the other members of the Senate that he was a man of great reserve, who seemed constantly to be depreciating his own abilities, a man so modest as to make acquaintance with him somewhat difficult of achievement. It was found that he knew nothing, practically, of the ways of legislation in the Senate. And so it happened that for the first few months that he was here the new Senator from California did nothing but listen to the proceedings of the Senate and attempt to learn the ways of that body that he might be able to assist in applying them to the practical things that might arise.

MAKES HIS POWER FELT.

After a little while Senator Bard was given some committee assignments. He was put on Indian Affairs, Public Lands, Railroads and Territories, and is now chairman of the Committee on Irrigation. After he had attended a few committee meetings, and taken part in the discussions, in those committees, the report came to the Senate from the committees of which Mr. Bard was a member that in Senator Bard the United States Senate had acquired some substance, that he was practical and fit to enter into the serious work of the Senate. Then, after a time, the Hay-Pauncefote canal treaty came to the Senate for ratification. It appears that Senator Bard had been something of a student of canal matters for some time, and when that document reached the Senate and came up for ratification, he found what he considered to be two great faults with it. There were other faults that he discovered, but two of them he considered to be vital. One was that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty continued in force and gave new life to the old and obnoxious Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The other was that the new treaty took the nations of the world into partnership with the United States in the control or management of the canal, which was to be built with money out of the Treasury of the United States.

GOOD WORK ON CANAL TREATY.

Senator Bard called these two defects to the attention of the leaders of the Senate in an indirect but effective way. He insisted that the United States should have absolute control over the canal zone—that it should be American territory—and he insisted that the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty be abrogated. The result was that the debate in the Senate went on for weeks, and Congress adjourned without ratifying the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. At the next session of Congress, however, the treaty was amended so as to comply with the two vital points first raised by Senator Bard; then it was ratified and accepted by the British government. The result is that the United States has now gone to work to dig a canal that will be run through American territory, over which this country will have absolute control, and the old and trouble-making Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which was a bugaboo to the American people for something like half a century, is in limbo, where it ought to have been long before it was.

The work that Senator Bard did in that matter—the fact that he had studied the situation with sufficient care to be able to make suggestions of such profound value to the country—gave him his first real start in the Senate as a man of independent thought. It was considered by the Senate to be advisory legislative work of the first order, and many of the members of the Senate to this day recall that these suggestions first originated with Senator Bard.

OPPOSED STATEHOOD BILL.

When Senator Bard was put upon the Senate Committee on Territories it was thought in a general way that he, a western man, would favor Statehood for all of the Territories. In the course of time, however, the House of Representatives, with unusually impetuous abandon, passed a bill creating four new States out of Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Arizona and New Mexico. The bill went to the Senate, was referred to the Senate Committee on Territories and consideration of it was commenced there. Immediately the committee was canvassed to ascertain whether it would be reported to the Senate or not. It was discovered that if Senator Bard voted in favor of making a favorable report on the bill it would be reported out, and the political prophets at once declared that Senator Bard would not dare, for political reasons, to vote against reporting the bill. He did vote against it, however, prevented its being reported favorably to the Senate, and when it did finally come before the Senate Mr. Bard felt called upon to make his first speech in that body. That speech was an argument against the admission of these four new States. Parts of two days were required for the delivery of the argument.

LOYAL TO HOME PRODUCTS.

Then came along, after a while, the Cuban Reciprocity Bill, which, after being defeated, was followed by the Cuban reciprocity treaty. At the outset Senator Bard took a stand against reciprocity with Cuba, and while one member of the House after another was being brought into line for it, and while Senators all around him were deserting the opposition to reciprocity and going over to those who favored it, Senator Bard stood to the last. He said it was an "unjustifiable magnanimity at the expense of our citrus, beet-sugar and tobacco interests," and every vote that was had on the proposition from the beginning to the end of that long and bitter fight found him voting against Cuban reciprocity, and in so voting he voted against his party. Some of his friends feared that he would hurt himself with the Senate by his stubborn refusal to yield. That proved to be wrong. The Senate may at another day want a man who will not yield when he believes he is right. Many of the leaders there, when such a man is wanted, will turn instinctively to Senator Bard. His strength in the Senate is greater for having stood fast.

HIS HIGH POSITION.

In the session of Congress coming to a close now, and in the session of a year ago, Senator Bard commenced to take his place as an adviser to the responsible leaders on the Republican organization in the Senate. There are in the Senate few more profound, valuable and upright statesmen than Senator Platt of Connecticut, who has formed a great admiration for Senator Bard's qualities of mind and character. Others of the great Senators, the working Senators, like Spooner and Fairbanks and Quarles, have placed their estimate upon the junior Senator from California, and it is a high estimate. These men believe that Senators who can bring conscientious and at the same time practical, thought to the great questions that constantly confront the legislative branch of the government, are an honor to their State and a credit—an asset is the better term—to the nation. Fireworks are all right in their place, and they are necessary, but the United States Senate needs substance more than fireworks. With the government making appropriations at the rate of nearly a billion dollars a year, the various States would do themselves proud and render the country a service, by sending their sanest, soundest, most conscientious men to the United States Senate.

WORK FOR CALIFORNIA.

Senator Bard has not neglected the interests of California, and particularly of Southern California, while he has been devoting himself to the work of assisting in larger fields of legislative activity. His work in getting an appropriation for the inner harbor at San Pedro was of the highest value, not only to Los Angeles and Southern California, but to the whole Southwest. That work is so recent that not much mention need be made of it now in summarizing his general work in Congress. His work in getting a Federal building for Los Angeles was another thing that showed his interest in his home community. The amendment that made the legislation possible was drafted by Senator Bard and put through the Senate by him with the greatest of ease, and meanwhile he was called upon to assist in getting it through the House, where it was tied up by the inability of Mr. McLachlan to handle the situation with neatness and dispatch.

Just by way of showing what Senator Bard is doing from day to day, here is a list of the things that he has done since Congress opened in November last up to the present time:

HIS RECORD IN DETAIL.

November 16—Presented sundry petitions for investigation of charges against Senator Smoot.

November 16—Introduced a bill granting a pension to John L. Beveridge.

November 16—Introduced a bill for the relief of Louise E. Ord.

November 25—Appointed chairman of the Senate Committee on Irrigation.

December 11—Addressed the Senate in opposition to the passage of the bill to carry into effect a convention between the United States and the republic of Cuba, signed December 11, 1902. (The speech appears in the Congressional Record, p. 143-147, 58, 2d.)

December 16—Presented petition praying for enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Government military training camp on Nacimiento Rho.; improvement of Siuslaw Harbor; construct Panama Canal; and petitions of numerous organizations and individuals asking investigation of charges against Mr. Smoot.

December 16—Mr. Bard, from the Committee on Public Lands, favorably reported the bill authorizing the recorder of the General Land Office to issue certified copies of patents, records, etc., and submitted a report thereon. The bill, after debate, but without opposition, passed the Senate, January 27, 1904.

December 18—Presented sundry petitions for investigation of charges against Senator Smoot.

December 17—Moved to print the first annual report of the Reclamation Service.

January 13—Reported from the Committee on Public Lands, (S. 703) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the I.O.O.F. of Central City, Colo.; reported with amendment, and submitted report; passed Senate, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands of the House. No action, April 10, 1904, in House.

January 12—Introduced S. 3276, authorizing Secretary of Interior to acquire ownership private lands within certain public parks in the State of California; reported it out of committee, and submitted report No. 1019.

January 20—Introduced bill to increase pension of William Turner.

January 25—Reported bill (S. 904) granting to California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands, without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; introduced by Senator Perkins and has not yet been called up; still on calendar.

January 25—Introduced S. 3772, correcting military record of David Bullis.

January 27—Reported from the Committee on Public Lands (S. 2223) providing means of acquiring title to two groves of Sequoia Gigantea, California; favorably reported with amendment, report submitted thereon; bill still on Senate calendar and not called up for the reason that it cannot pass the House.

January 28—Reported from Committee on Indian Affairs, memorial of Northern California Indian Association, praying that land be allotted to to landless Indians in Northern California; moved that it be printed as a document; motion agreed to.

February 15—Reported from Committee on Indian Affairs H. R. 11, 128, to modify and amend agreement with Indians of Devil's Lake Reservation, N. D.; reported with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

At same time, reported back S. 387, referring to the same subject, which, upon motion, was indefinitely postponed. The above bill supplanted it and passed the Senate April 22.

February 22—Introduced S. 4453, Los Angeles Public Building Bill.

February 26—Introduced S. 4604, granting increase of pension to Frances E. Kent; no action to date.

March 2—Report from Committee on Territories, H.R. 6493, to ratify act of legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona; reported without amendment and submitted a report thereon; on Senate calendar and will be called up.

March 10—Submitted an amendment to Indian Appropriation Bill to provide that Irrigation Act shall apply to irrigable lands on Yuma and Colorado River Indian Reservations, in California and Arizona, and authorizing Secretary of Interior to divert waters of the Colorado River for reclamation of land in the said reservations.

This amendment was adopted by committee and remains in the bill already passed Congress.

March 10—Also submitted amendment of same character as above, applying to Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nevada. This provision is also retained in the bill and has become law.

March 15—Los Angeles Public Building Bill called up by Senator Bard and passed the Senate without amendment.

March 16—Reported from Committee on Public Lands, S. 4372, for relief of owners of Cat Island in the Gulf of Mexico; reported with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon. This bill passed the Senate. This measure had been pending before Congress for several years. It relates to the confirmation of a grant under the Spanish government. The investigation by Senator Bard as a sub-committee involved very considerable research relating to the history of the claim, beginning about 1780 and complications arising from the occupation of the island by the government as a military reservation, its surrender of same, and the subsequent acquisition of title by the government to a portion thereof for lighthouse purposes. Passed the Senate and referred to House Committee on Interstate Commerce.

March 22—Remarks before Senate on provision in Indian Appropriation Bill, for payment to J. Hale Sypher out of funds belonging to Choctaw Nation $50,000. This matter was the subject of long debate on the floor of the Senate. (See pp. 3730 to 3743, 58th, 2d. Congressional Record.)

March 26—Introduced S. 5277, to promote further discovery and research in meteorology (forecasting weather conditions.) It provides for the appointment of a board of three persons, by the President, chosen from nominations made by five of the principal universities of the country, excluding State universities. The reason for excluding the State universities was because of their great numbers. The board is to examine and report upon a system of long-range weather forecasting, and to award prizes for an exposition of the physical basis of meteorology, and the best system of forecasting based thereon. (This was/ at the time, fully discussed in Washington dispatches to The Times.)

March 26—Submitted resolution, which was agreed to, providing for printing of letter of the Secretary of the Interior addressed to him as chairman of the Senate Committee on Irrigation, reporting upon the organization of the Reclamation Service.

March 30—Submitted resolution authorizing Committee on Irrigation to employ a stenographer to report testimony and to have it printed. (Under this authorization, the committee heard and printed the statements of A. H. Heber, William E. Smythe and others, and reports of the Geological Survey in reference to irrigation projects, and the development of the Imperial Valley.)

March 30—Introduced amendment to Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill to appropriate $208,750 for purchase of toll roads in Yosemite National Park; also,

March 30—Introduced an amendment to appropriate $50,000 for construction of a new wagon road in the Yosemite National Park.

March 29—Submitted an amendment to Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill providing for acquiring title to Big Tree groves. On April 1 a change of reference obtained from Committee on Appropriations to Committee on Public Lands, of which he is a member. April 6 reported same from the Committee on Public Lands, and had it re-referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

April 5—Submitted amendment to Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill appropriating $2225 to pay widow of Gen. Longstreet unexpended part of salary of the Commissioner of Railroads.

April 7—Offered an amendment to the Sundry Civil Bill, authorizing the acquisition of additional land for the public building at Los Angeles; being substantially the same as the bill (S. 4453) above referred to, which Mr. McLachlan feared would not receive action in the House, although it (the said Senate bill) had been favorably reported by the House Committee.

April 1—Introduced S. 5346, granting increase of pension to Amon A. Webster.

April 8—Reported from Committee on Indian Affairs H. R. 11,676, to ratify agreement with Indians of Crow reservation in Montana, with amendments, and submitted a report thereon. This bill involved considerable work in perfecting it. A large number of Senate amendments were necessary, among which was the important measure of providing for the withdrawal of [illegible] acres to be subject to the Irrigation Act. The bill opens up for settlement [illegible] acres in Montana.

April 18—Reported from Committee on Irrigation joint resolution (S. R. 71) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to institute an investigation on various questions involved in connection with the use of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation, and to report to Congress thereon, and asked for unanimous consent for present consideration. Objection being made by Mr. Teller, the matter went over; but with the purpose of informing the Senate concerning the matter, caused to be printed in the Record the communication of the director of the Geological Survey and the hearings of Heber and Smythe, of considerable length. This was not premeditated, but upon the spur of the moment, realizing that the resolution would have precedence the next morning, and deeming it necessary, in view of the objections, that the Senate should be fully informed relative to the subject matter, he asked whether it would be in order to request that the documents be printed in the Record; and the President having said that the motion was in order, he asked that they be printed. This Senate resolution was called up on the following day (April 19,) and was passed.

April 20—Submitted an amendment to the General Deficiency Appropriation Bill ap. $1250 for relief of widow of Gen. James Longstreet, which passed the Senate on April 22.

April 21—Reported from the Committee on Public Lands S. 5567 to exclude from the Yosemite National Park certain lands, and to include same in the Sierra forest reserve. An identical bill had already been introduced in the House by Mr. Needham.

Steadfast.

"A woman should be able to trust her husband," said the idealist, "and feel that he has the courage to remain steadfast in his purpose, despite rebuffs."

"Well," answered young Mrs. Torkins, "that's exactly the kind of man Charley is. He has lost at every race meeting for the past three years, but he is just as steadfast in purpose as ever.—Washington Star.

CALIFORNIA AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

State Exhibits in Good Condition for the Opening Day—Unique and Interesting Display in the Mining Section.

BY EDMUND MITCHELL.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS, May 1.—The telegraph has already carries the news far and wide how President Roosevelt by the touching of an electric button in the White House at Washington has opened the Louisiana Purchase Exposition to the world. Amid the [illegible] the strains of band music, the pealing of bells, the white gleam of playing waters, and the simultaneous bursting into view of countless flags on every building, the historic act was completed. Further description of the scene is unnecessary. It was certainly an inspiring spectacle [illegible] of fairy land [illegible]. So then as the doors of the several exposition palaces were opened wide, I started on a tour of inspection, just to see how California stood on this day of inauguration. Amid signs of unpreparedness on every hand, it was pleasant to note that the State already makes an excellent showing. Not everything has been accomplished towards putting the various sections into final order, but all are well advanced, so that an intelligent survey of the varied resources of California is even now possible. Indeed, the verdict may be given that no State has done better as regards general preparedness all over the grounds, while in more than one building California easily takes first place on the score of readiness. This applies especially to the departments of horticulture, agriculture and forestry.

THE FRUIT DISPLAY.

In the Horticultural Building the fruit exhibits are a state display—that is, they are massed without special regard to the individual counties of production. The effect is very impressive. A great floor space is occupied, and the bewildering variety of the fruits shown is in itself an eloquent object lesson—oranges, lemons, apples, grapes, walnuts, almonds, peaches, apricots, figs, olives, melons and so on. Most of the deciduous fruits are for the present shown in sealed glass vases or in the dried state of commerce, but as the season advances the fresh product of the orchards will be brought in and kept constantly renewed.

Meanwhile, however, apples in great variety make a very beautiful show, having come out of cold storage as perfect in appearance and condition as on the day last fall when they were put away for preservation. The apples have come from the seven southern counties of the State and also from one northern section. All the world knows and can here see] the preeminence of California as a grower of citrus fruits, but these tables of apples, side by side with others laden with oranges and lemons, come somewhat as a surprise to many visitors. Trophies of almonds and English walnuts are also effective. I noticed loquats of this season's growth, and cantaloupes are promised within the next few days. The pavilion in which these fruit exhibits are arranged is a happy suggestion of Old Mission style of interior architecture.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

In the adjoining Palace of Agriculture, a different scheme of arrangement has been adopted. Twenty-eight different counties have their separate pavilions within a general enclosing pavilion, the total area occupied being greater than that assigned to any other State or country in the building. Each county is responsible for its own exhibits, and most of the special structures erected for their display are elaborate and imposing. By this plan of exhibition there may be a loss of breadth of effect, some crowding, and very considerable duplication.

But the visitor is enabled to proceed from county to county, and, while gaining an exhaustive knowledge of particular localities that may have awakened his interest, he cannot fail to be impressed with the wonderful richness, the variety, and the wide distribution of the agricultural resources of the State. In this building, as well as in that of Horticulture, by a slight departure from the official classification, fruit in glass vases is largely used for decorative purposes. To enumerate the products displayed would simply be to catalogue everything that is grown for food in California, from pumpkins to peanuts. The exhibit as a whole goes to prove conclusively that the State is undoubtedly the most diversified producer within the union. A fine trophy of olive oil in bottles may be specially noted.

FINE TIMBER EXHIBIT.

Not merely to the general public, but to many Californians themselves, the show of polished timbers in the Forestry Building will prove a revelation. Slabs and sections of redwood, California walnut, Monterey cypress, sequoia, Douglas spruce, yellow pine, sugar pine, white and red cedar, sycamore, laurel, myrtle, yew, maple, ash, locust, cherry, birch—the list of woods capable of taking the finest polish and revealing the most beautiful coloring and graining seems inexhaustible. A farmer is not to be blamed for putting to effective use the material that comes readiest to his hand, but when one's glance rests on a couple of ordinary fence rails polished that they might become exquisite panels in a drawing room, there cannot but occur the thought that the most profitable uses are not being made of nature's lavish gifts.

To practical men on the outlook for timbers for fine cabinet work, this exhibit of California's resources in this particular line will appeal with great directness. The beautiful architectural effects to be gained by the use of redwood are also illustrated by means of a columnar and arched section of a facade. The visitor, too, who is fond of gleaning general information can spend an exceedingly profitable and interesting hour in the pavilion. There are many curiosities of tree growth shown, and the expert in charge is pleased to give explanations. For example, how come the characteristic markings of the birdseye maple, different in class from those of every other tree shown? Well, the sapsucker, a species of woodpecker is responsible. He pecks, pecks, pecks when the tree is young, so that the bark grows into the tiny holes, and becomes a sort of mold for the future growth of the wood. Hence the beautiful black and white mottling of the slab that leaves the polisher's hands. In this building, the California fish and game exhibits are not yet in position, although the pavilion is ready for their reception.

In the Palace of Education, the position allotted to the state is a prominent one, near a corner doorway, so that the attention of visitors is at once attracted to the strikingly handsome pavilion of redwood, itself an exhibit by right of beautiful design and exquisite carving. Within this structure is arranged a complete educational exhibit of California, from kindergarten to university. There are also a State Normal School exhibit, a State Library exhibit, and some very large and handsome photographs. Berkeley University is to have a special display in the vestibule adjoining the pavilion, but this part of the installation will not be complete for some little time.

MINING DEPARTMENT.

We now come to mining, the last of California's groups of exhibits. Here there has been somewhat of a new departure. There is little attempt made to display sensationally rich ore specimens or dazzling nuggets. These might have served to tempt the adventurous, but the man with capital to invest, as also the experienced miner, knows their true significance, and has only a casual glance to bestow. Accordingly the organizers of the mining exhibit have chosen rather to work to the following principle: namely, to let the producer in other States see that if he should decide to change his home to the favored climate of California, he can carry with him his own special industry, or can readily find other profitable employment for his capital and enterprise. Structural and industrial materials have the place of prominence. Here are just a few openings for the extended use of capital indicated by exhibits—cement, clays, building stone, lime, oil, asphalt, bituminous rock, coal. The lesson in particular instances is most forcibly put. For example, a picturesque grotto of lithium mica from San Diego county arrests the eye, and inquiry shows that the following industrial story is attached to it. The stone is actually shipped to Germany for the extraction of lithia salts, to be used in the manufacture of mineral waters and medical tabloids. The moral is obvious.

MANY LESSONS TO BE LEARNED.

There are many other lessons of the same kind to be gleaned from the display—copper ore, borax, and other materials shipped out of the State for reduction when, by the employment of capital, home treatment could be made profitable. Nitrate of soda from Death Valley, precisely similar to the deposits that have made the wealth of Chile, suggests an almost unlimited field for energetic commercial exploitation. And so on—this practical note being the dominant one everywhere.

Besides models of mining and oil drilling plants, the most conspicuous object in the pavilion is a composite arch of building materials, a really handsome and impressive structure. Blocks of granite, sandstone, and marble from various quarries in the State are built together, the top finished with terra cotta work and pressed bricks. On one of the slabs of granite is the following inscription, in recognition of the special interest manifested in the exhibit by this journal:

THE LOS ANGELES TIMES.
For Liberty, Law and Industrial Peace.
For the Development of the Pacific Southwest.

A CENTER OF INTEREST.

There is a supplementary outside mining exhibit in process of erection by California that is likely to prove one of the centers of attraction of the fair. The third oldest gold milling plant ever eerected in the State has been brought to St. Louis; it hails from Shasta county, and its date of original construction was 1853.

Here are primitive wooden stamps, ironshod, with hog-trough mortar boxes, and old water wheel by which the power was developed. In effective contrast a small modern stamp mill, with all the most recent improvements, to be worked by electric power, is being put up side by side with its venerable prototype. This up-to-date plant will be in operation for a few hours each day, reducing ores that are to be brought in quantity from the mining centers nearest and most convenient to St. Louis.

A rotary mill of Los Angeles manufacture will also be running, besides three concentration plants. The illustration of modern mining methods is completed by a hydraulic giant, such as can sluice away a whole hill side.

CALIFORIA PROMINENT.

On yet two other places within the exposition grounds California is in evidence. The great organ from Los Angeles, the largest ever constructed, is going up in Festival Hall, where it will not only dispense music, but turn the thoughts of a good few listeners to the fact that for certain delicate industries the climate of Southern California offers advantages that can be met with nowhere else in America. Not very far distant is the club house of the State, a small but very distinctive building. The facade is a reproduction of the Santa Barbara Mission, with pillars and bells complete, and even every crack and crevice showing. The interior is in the Mission beam-and-post style. There are reading rooms where California newspapers will be filed, rest rooms, toilet rooms, reception halls on both floors, an assembly hall for conferences, and a bureau of information. Three Californian manufactured pianos will be among the furnishings, and a fine selection of California pictures on the walls. Structurally the building is complete, and only the placing of the Old Mission furniture remains.

It is announced that the club house will be opened to the public on May 15, and the invitation is extended to all Californians visiting the fair to make the place their rendezvous. Like its next-door neighbor, the large and splendid building representing Illinois, the Californian edifice is not on the section of the grounds devoted exclusively to state buildings. But this has some advantages, for it is placed exactly in the center of the entire exposition—if one folds a sheet of notepaper lengthwise, then across, the point of intersection of the two folds marks the precise location. The site is a commanding one, on a gentle eminence, with fine views on all sides, and the vicinity is being made beautiful with palms and other characteristic trees of the far West.

Altogether it will be seen that California well holds the eye throughout the exposition. All members of the commission, from Frank Wiggings and J. A. Filcher down through every rank of their assistants, have thrown into their work the greatest zeal and energy, and the results entitle both them and the State to hearty congratulation.

As indicating the great distances of the fair, I may point out that the round I have described covers distances aggregating at least five miles. Yet the entire itinerary lies well within the really central section of the exposition. When the intramural railway starts running the viewing of any one State's or country's exhibits will be rendered less of a serious pedestrian undertaking.

The Antarctic Continent.

That a vast Antarctic continent exists, perhaps twice as large as that of Europe, would seem to be proved by the reports now appearing of the recent explorations in that region. The American, Commander Wilkes, returning from the Far South in 1841, asserted the existence of a vast south polar continent, and described his voyage of 1500 miles in sight of the coast. Ross, however, returning soon after, discredited Wilkes's conclusions, saying that the land seen by Wilkes was merely a great wall of ice. The world has been in doubt which to believe.

That Ross was wrong and Wilkes right is very evident from the report of Capt. Scott of the British Antarctic expedition of 1901-1904. Capt. Scott shows that the mass of ice seen by Ross is in reality an extensive glacier resting on land and covering the land like the ice cap of Greenland. The glacier is about 700 miles wide, and reaches the sea through a plain lying between Victoria Land and Edward VII Land. The German expedition under Von Drygalski, working 80 degrees of longitude farther west, also found a somewhat similar expanse of ice-capped land, whose limits they were unable to trace, but which is apparently a part of the same Antarctic continent.—[National Geographic Magazine.

ers, were paid and directed by the mine owners. The Governor himself sided with the mine owners. The troops came out not merely to prevent violence, but to break the strike, 'to do up this anarchistic federation,' as Gen. Sherman Bell himself told me.

"On the other hand, no one who knows anything of the history of the Miners' Union in Colorado can doubt that there would have been violence and assassination if the operators had attempted to open their mines without military protection. A consideration of this history is necessary to an understanding of the character of the miners' union.

BATTLE AT TELLURIDE.

"In 1901 a strike was called in Telluride, backed by the Western Federation of Miners. It was a strike primarily against the contract or piecework system, the union demanding a uniform work day with a minimum wage. After a month of idleness, Superintendent Arthur L. Collins, of the Smuggler-Union property, opened his mine with non-union men.

"The local union ordered 250 rifles and 50,000 rounds of ammunition from Denver. On the morning of July 3, as the 'scab' miners of the night shift were leaving the Smuggler-Union, they were fired upon from every direction by men hidden among the rocks of the mountain side. It was a complete ambush. Several men fell wounded; the others returned the fire.

"After a battle lasting several hours, the party at the mine, outnumbered and outclassed in arms, displayed a flag of truce. A parley was arranged between St. John and a representative of the mine owners, exactly as in real war. Possession of the mine was finally yielded to the strikers upon the promise that the 'scab' workers, the foreman and others, should be allowed to depart in peace with their wounded. But when the 'scabs' had given up their arms and were left unprotected, the strikers surrounded them, tore open their bundles, stole everything worth appropriating, then subjected them to all manner of abuse and violence. Finally the 'scabs' were formed in line, driven up the mountain side, over a rocky trail, and out of the district.

"Left thus in undisputed supremacy the union made such terms as it desired with the operators, finally signing a three years' contract covering the matter of hours and wages.

MANAGER ASSASSINATED.

"On November 19, 1902, over a year after the strike was over. Manager Collins of the Smuggler-Union mine, sitting at a lighted window in his house, was shot and instantly killed by an assassin out in the dark. Collins was a mining engineer respected throughout Colorado; and his assassination did more than any other one thing to intensify the feeling of hatred of the union.

"Similar violences occurred in Cripple Creek in 1894. The strikers armed and fortified themselves on Bull Hill, taking control of certain of the mines. An army of deputy sheriffs was organized, and, had it not been for the arrival of the troops, a bloody battle must have followed.

"On November 21, while the troops were in control, Superintendent McCormick, and Beck, shift boss, were descending into the Vindicator mine, which had opened with 'scab' labor. At the sixth level a terrific explosion from an infernal machine wrecked the cage and killed both men instantly.

IS UNION RESPONSIBLE?

"Union leaders here, as in every other strike, deny that the union is responsible for this bloodshed and violence. It is always difficult to fix definitely the blame for these secret crimes, and especially difficult in towns like Cripple Creek, Telluride, and other Colorado camps, where the population is made up so largely of members of the union. Sheriff Robertson, the chief executive officer of Teller county, for instance, is a member of Miners' Union No. 40, and practically all of the other county officers are union men or union sympathizers. What is the result? Union men arrested for assaults on 'scabs,' or for other deeds of violence, are rarely punished. Scab-beating is not a crime in Teller county.

"On the other hand, an officer who does not execute the law to suit the union, sometimes pays high for his temerity. For instance, in August the union was instrumental in having several non-union workers at the El Paso mine arrested for carrying concealed weapons. Justice of the Peace John T. Hawkins fined one man $5 and discharged the others—a judgment far too lenient for these 'scabs,' the union thought. On September 2, in full daylight, on the main street of Altman, Justice Hawkins was assaulted from behind, knocked down, and then jumped upon and kicked. When he recovered he walked across the street and asked a man—a union man—if he knew who had struck him. This was the reply: 'I saw him and I know him, but I will not tell you, you scab protector. If it had been me, you can bet your life I would have done a better job.'

WHAT SOCIALISM MEANS TO UNIONISM.

"Another influence has been poent in the strike. The Western Federation of Miners has declared itself Socialistic; preaches the Socialistic doctrine, urges its members to vote the Socialist ticket, although a large proportion of the membership is not Socialistic. In this respect it departs widely from the conservative trades-union movement of the country. The Socialist regards the employer as a robber, an exploiter, of whom he is the victim, and no matter how much the employer might give him in increased wages and shorter hours, he would still be a robber and the Socialist the victim. He even tends to lose respect for property, regarding it as the accumulation of robber wealth; on the card which every member of the Western Federation of Miners carries and printed in the cover of the official organ of the union, the Miners' Magazine, is this slogan of Socialism: 'Labor produces all wealth; wealth belongs to the producer thereof.'

"I listened several times to the speeches of President Moyer, 'Mother' Jones, and other leaders. Here is a sample from 'Mother' Jones:

" 'These robber exploiters take the wealth that we have produced by the toil of our hands and the sweat of our brows. Before the warfare comes to an end labor must be given all, capital itself must be destroyed and Socialism must take its place.'

"How can President Moyer and Secretary Haywood go from a meeting in which they have been making their followers believe these things and talk calm business agreements with employers who have no right to existence?"

COUNT ORANGES BY THE BLOSSOMS.

WILD ESTIMATES MADE ON THE FLORIDA CROP.

Five Million Boxes Predicted for This Season—Californians Need Not be Alarmed, However—More Suggestions for Improvement of Market and Benefit of Growers.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, April 30.—Estimates on the size of the coming Florida orange crop are beginning to come. One enthusiastic individual points excitedly to the heavy bloom on the trees and predicts 5,500,000 boxes. He bases his assertion upon the reported yield of 3,000,000 boxes the past season. But he fails to mention the fact that the closing season's crop was 2,000,000 to 2,500,000 boxes. It is said that estimates of the coming crop are based upon the profusion of bloom, but every grower of fruit knows that profusion of blossom doesn't make fruit. Conservative estimates would probably place the crop around 3,000,000 to 3,500,000 boxes. Growers in California need not worry about the outlook in Florida as yet. If California continues to produce good oranges the prospective quantity which may be produced in Florida during the coming season will not make much difference.

MORE SUGGESTIONS.

All sorts of suggestions continue to be made as to how to improve the orange market. A well-posted man recently said to The Times representative:

"The agency should have tried to induce all jobbers and other distributing agencies to continue the work they had been doing. The agency shipped all cars into all cities which ordinarily order their supplies from New York. In this way they prevented the brokers from getting a good deal of business and jobbers lost customers who had previously bought liberally. Having antagonized the jobbers, brokers, commission men and others, the agency does nothing to remove the bad impression. A good diplomat is needed now to straighten out the difficulties; also a well-posted press agent who could also keep close watch upon Eastern markets by mixing among buyers and sellers, and his observations should be important factors in determining how shipments should be regulated.

"There ought to be a revision of the brand list. Fruit now placed in the official brand list as fancy or extra fancy will not grade above choice, but according to the system of the Agency it must be graded according to the brand and not according to the actual quality of the fruit. This revision would simplify matters at the selling end, and would result in more satisfactory conditions in many ways. Growers should also get a better acquaintance with the selling end, as this would have influence in determining their future course in arranging for future business."

SIGNIFICANT MOVE.

Independent receivers of oranges have recently had an important accession to their numbers. This firm has just received its first car of California oranges from Orange, which arrived in excellent condition. There are two reasons why this single car is of importance in this market. First, is the fact that the firm is one of the largest handlers of Floridas in New York, and up to now has never done anything in Californias. The second important factor is the fact that the firm is managed upon very progressive lines, and has outlets for its fruit which no one else can touch, and so will command a special trade. This firm says it is convinced that the California orange is destined to be an important factor in the fresh fruit market during a considerable portion of the year and is taking up the trade as a matter of business.

Greater Courage Needed.

Modern warfare makes greater demands upon the hearts and nerves of men than ancient or middle-age conflicts could possibly do. Even in the olden times—as far back as the wars between Hebrew and Philistine—it was the ambushment that was most dreaded by leader and ranker, but what were the concealments of those and of succeeding times compared with today's possibilities? In olden days skill, not courage, was the prime requisite in the use of weapons of offense. The operator of catapult or ballista, even the gunner until within the last few years, had no reason to fear his enginery of war as retroactive. Today, so terrible are the agencies of destruction held in suspension in every powder charge of explosive projectile that "the man behind the gun" must have the courage that ignores danger if he would be effective. The greater the advance in the science of explosives the wider the recognition of the fact that man cannot measure, or limit, the chemical actions and reactions, dangerous to life and limb, set free at every discharge of high-power ordnance.

If the soldier on land has need of highest measure of coolness and contempt of danger, how shall we scale the fortitude required of the sea fighter? No one doubts Nelson's intrepidity. Yet he would have required training and usage to have kept his head at sight of the horrors wrought by a single 7, 8 or 12-inch shell of twentieth-century construction. One discharge of a battery of a first-class battleship would do more damage, relatively, than all the cannonading, French and English, at Trafalgar. The torpedoes that Farragut objurgated so splendidly in the 60s were as flies to vultures compared with the mines that have robbed Russia of prestige and power at Port Arthur and on the Yellow Sea.—[Cleveland Leader.

THE ISLE OF UNREST.

Some Startling Facts and Fi About Santo Domingo—The La and the People.

[World's Work:] Santo Domingo theoretically a republic, covers two-thirds of the largest and richest is and in the West Indies, except Cuba. Its population can only be guessed at, for the official figures are untrustworthy. There are probably 500,000 negroes and mulattoes scattered over 18,000 square miles. They are often half-starved, and always living from hand to mouth, for there is little incentive to honest industry when a party of soldiers may come along at any moment and eat up the fruit of a man's labor. The country could easily support 5,000,000 people in prosperity and comfort. But it has been at war, with hardly any considerable intermission, for about a hundred years. There is no other country in the world, not even Venezuela, with such a record.

The disparity in numbers between women and men is even greater in the country villages than in the cities, for the men are apt to flock to the towns or to be marched off to fight by one of the numerous guerrilla bands. Polygamy results in the country districts. A peasant usually has four or five wives, who live in common and work for him and the children. Yet the population does not increase. That is the most striking testimony to the condition of the country. The men are steadily thinned down by the wars, and three-fourths of the children die in infancy, owing to the ignorance of their mothers and the lack of medical care. I have seen babies a few months old given raw plantain to eat when they cried. I have known babies, too, to be killed by government soldiers before the eyes of their mothers, because their fathers were fighting in the ranks of the revolutionists. Fifteen women and children were shot in cold blood in the town of San Pedro de Macoris, an important port, in 1900, with the deliberate purpose of deterring other men from joining the revolutionists.

But this is not all. There is probably no foreign country in the world in which Americans have a larger share of the national commerce and industry and none in which American interests suffer more.

Under American domination, the marvelous resources of the country would be rapidly developed and the evils created by a century of warfare, misgovernment, and ignorant superstition would be gradually remedied. Actually, Santo Domingo is probably one of the porest countries of its size on earth; potentially, it is one of the richest. It furnishes unlimited opportunities for development.

Employers and Employes.

The employer is never long blind to the merits or demerits of any of his employés. They are always under observation, and that one who gives the best and most valuable service is pretty certain to receive the reward. It is not uncommon for an employé to decide that he will give himself no more than he considers absolutely necessary to earn the small or large salary paid him. He will come to his task as late, leave it as early as possible, and while at it he will not strain either brain or muscle. Such an employé does not work for himself as he foolishly fancies he is doing; he is working against himself. The time will come when he will perceive that his associate who goes to work early, stays late and gives generously of mind and muscle to his work has gone ahead of him in the race for higher position and increased salary.

The employer generally is wise enough to know that his chances of success depend very largely upon his employés, and in the end it is not only the survival but the promotion of the fittest, the most loyal, efficient and honest. In fact, in the race for advancement in the busy world there is no place nor chance for the employé who will go no further with his work than to just earn, and no more, the salary or wage paid him. The employé who works with all his powers of strength and ability for his employer, in recognition of the fact that he is thus working for himself, is the one who wins the prize in the race of business.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

How Dream Charm Works.

"Man down in my country," said Representative Clayton, of Alabama, "saw a dog sleeping in the sun. The dog was twitching and starting as dogs sometimes do in their sleep. The man said, 'I'd like to know what the dog is dreaming about.'

" 'Easy enough,' replied an old darky who stood by. 'You just put a chip on that dog's ear and leave it there until he wakes up. Then you take the chip and put it on your chest when you go to bed tonight and you'll dream of what the dog is dreaming of now.'

"The fellow got a chip and put it on the dog's ear, and stood around till the dog waked up and bounded off. He put the chip on his chest when he went to bed that night. Next morning I saw him coming listlessly down the street.

" 'What's the matter?' I said. 'What was the dog dreaming about?'

" 'Oh,' he answered, 'I'm clean tuckered out. I was chasing rabbits all night long.' "—[Pitsburg Press.

Our Opening Day at Sunnyside

But Don't Wait For That!
Come Now! Come Today! We Pay Your Fares!

Remember, in taking advantage of these trips you are in no way obliged to buy. We simply desire to show you the property and allow your own good judgment to decide whether you purchase or not.

WATER SUPPLY

"How about water?" is the first question asked by the wise purchaser of land in Southern California, where water comes first, and land second. In this respect, there is perhaps no tract in the state with better water facilities. Much of the land is naturally moist, alfalfa having been raised without irrigation. It is underlaid by an apparently inexhaustible supply of water, within eight feet of the surface. A well has been sunk 275 feet deep, which, by means of a powerful pump, furnishes 20 inches—sufficient for five times as much land as the tract contains. This water will be piped to each lot.

SUBURBAN VILLA HOMES

With the magnificent system of electric lines extending in a network from Los Angeles in every direction, this has become an ideal location for suburban villa homes. It is a strange thing that any man who is able to put up a fine residence costing anywhere from $5,000 up, should be content to place it on a 50-foot lot, where he may shake hands with his neighbors out of the side windows. In a half hour's ride the business man may be at Sunnyside, where he can purchase a two and a half acre tract for less than he would pay for a good residence lot in the city. Here he may rest his brain and improve his health by taking up, as a hobby, either horticulture, or floriculture, or poultry raising, or something of that kind, and return to his labors in the morning feeling rejuvenated.

BERRIES

Astonishing what a remarkably large yield of berries may be raised from a small piece of land in the rich, sandy loam soil at Sunnyside. The chief berries raised around here are strawberries, blackberries, raspberries, dewberries and loganberries. Instances are not infrequent where a crop of berries to the value of nearly a thousand dollars has been harvested from less than an acre of land. Strawberries may be marketed almost every month in the year. At Gardena, about six miles from Sunnyside, there are hundreds of acres in strawberries. The strawberry guava is also a profitable crop. This berry makes a fine jelly. There is no nicer location for berry culture than at Sunnyside.

SMALL PRODUCTIVE HOMES

It is the ambition of many an overworked American city dweller to become the owner of a small productive suburban home, where he may "sit under his own vine and fig tree, with no one to make him afraid." Here, in Southern California, is the ideal location for such homes. In this section a man with one acre of irrigated land, near a market, is far better off than the owner of eighty acres who depends on the uncertain rainfall. There are many in this section who not only make a good living, but lay by a little in the bank. from the product of one acre of land. They may raise all their family consumption, in the shape of fruit and vegetables, and milk, and butter, and eggs, and have a little something to dispose of, all the year round. Such men are truly independent. This you may do.

AS AN INVESTMENT

Twenty years ago you could have bought 60-foot lots on Spring street or Broadway—then called Fort street—for $2,000 apiece, that are now worth as many dollars a front foot. At the same time you could have purchased, in the Southwestern part of the city, for $50 an acre, property that now sells readily at $100 per front foot. The city is rapidly growing in a southerly and southwesterly direction. There is no better investment than real estate, judiciously purchased, especially where you can make it pay interest while you hold it. What will be the value of these Sunnyside lots twenty years hence?

From Men of Means and Position

It's a matter of gratification to us that over half the inquiries already received in regard to purchasing at Sunnyside are from men of means and business and social position. We do not know whether that has any particular significance to the general public or not, BUT IT CERTAINLY HAS TO US.

They know that all we say of the wonderful future of this section is, if anything, underestimated rather than exaggerated. They know the increase is inevitable—a certainty! Probably far greater than anyone now realizes.

SUNNYSIDE, THE COMING SUBURB

Sunnyside consists of 340 acres of level land, two miles south of the city limits of Los Angeles. We have one mile of frontage on Figueroa street, the most fashionable residence street of the city. It is bounded on the east by Main street and on the west by Vermont avenue, 120 feet wide. The principal buildings of Los Angeles may be plainly seen from the tract, and there is a magnificent view of the long Sierra Madre and San Bernardino ranges of mountains, the higher peaks snow-capped in winter. Every day in the year there is a mild breeze from the ocean, making a perfect climate.

Two lines of electric cars furnish transportation from Los Angeles to the tract, only a few minutes ride from the business center.

The soil is a rich loam. It has been largely used for cattle grazing and some of it was only recently plowed for the first time. It is especially adapted to the culture of berries, flowers and vegetables.

AS AN INVESTMENT

We believe this to be one of the safest, surest and most profitable that could be entered into. It is safer than a Savings Bank, as it is not subject to a panic, while the prospective profits are infinitely greater. No safer opportunity than this can be found in the neighborhood of Los Angeles. The city is steadily growing south. The tract fronts for a mile on Figueroa street, on which street less than three miles to the north, lots are worth $100 a front foot. Come to Sunnyside, the coming suburb. Within a few years it will be built up as solid as South Los Angeles is today.

COUNTRY LIFE

The poet Cowper said, "God made the country and man made the town." Many Americans, who are worn out and disgusted with the everlasting struggle for supremacy in our cities, and tired of life in flats and apartments, often feel the truth of this saying. They know that they would be better off, in every way, in homes of their own, but do not see exactly how they are to bring it about. Here is your chance. What others have done, through us, you may do. Come and see us, and let us tell you about the possibilities of beautiful Sunnyside.

POULTRY

Notwithstanding the fact that chickens are by no means scarce in Southern California, a very large quantity of eggs are imported from the East. The price of eggs ranges high in this section—high enough to make the poultry raisers of the Western States wish they were here. Eggs retaill during the year at from 15 to 40c a dozen, the price seldom running so low as the former figure, and probably averaging 25 cents per dozen, all the year round. At this price, there is certainly a good profit in poultry, when the fowls are given proper attention. Besides this, many make a handsome income by raising fine birds and selling the eggs for setting.

VEGETABLES

San Francisco and the northern part of the State depend largely on Southern California for winter vegetables, which are raised here for the market on a large scale. The principal vegetables grown in this way are peas, string beans and tomatoes, also chile peppers. A resident of Hollywood, near Los Angeles, has several acres in chile peppers, which he ships green to San Francisco. He has received as high as $800 from the product of one acre. There is also a good opening for the culture of fine asparagus. All these vegetables do well at Sunnyside.

THE DESPOILERS.

BY EDMUND MITCHELL.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

CHAPTER XXIV.
OLD PASSIONS STIR.

"Ah, my Carlos, you do not know me, even yet," said Medora, crumbling a little crust of bread between finger and thumb.

They were seated in a gaily lit and gaily gilded restaurant—in the semi-privacy of an alcove. It was a fashionable supper-room, as the elegant gowns and flashing jewels of many of the fair guests showed. But Medora kept a light mantle across her shoulders, that hid her tawdry costume of the stage, and, with lace scarf deftly gathered around her hair, passed muster in the throng. The waiter, having ceased his service in their particular corner, had withdrawn, and, although there was the murmur of laughing voices all around, for the purposes of confidential conversation they were alone.

Da Silva was listening, mellowed by the wine he had consumed in liberal quantity to a condition of mild complacency over the reconquest he had made. Medora was his again, the old comradeship in reckless gaiety was to be resumed, he was marveling now how he had managed to exist without her all these years. The prize was the more valued because it had not been lightly won. A week ago he would not have picked up Medora with a pair of tongs, social outcast that she was. But the mere sight of her upon the stage, rejuvenated by success, surrounded by admirers, an object of yearning and heart-burning for other men, had reawakened all the slumbering passions of his debauched soul. The fierce initial rebuff he had encountered had angered him, but it had also stimulated the ardour of his pursuit, and had brought him back a second time to the music hall, sullen and vengeful, but really hankering after the vixenish beauty who had scorned him and reviled him, slapped his face, spat upon him, and rolled him in the mire. Yes, her very rejection of his advances had added to his longing to have her back again; for if jealousy be the whetstone for love that has once grown dulled, it is resistance that makes the sparks fly and gives the keen razor-edge to desire. Don Carlos was well content with his victory. Medora had eaten her humble pie, her disdainful pride of the previous night had been subdued, and for the present at least, the crowning insult of that episode could be forgotten—until one of the ever-recurring quarrels, which had been the spice that had given piquancy to their former life, should afford the occasion for repayment with heavy interest and with a heavy hand.

He was listening now to her words with a smile that was half-mocking and half-triumphant.

"Oh, I understand you very well, my beauty," he replied, sending a lazy curl of smoke from the cigarette between his lips.

"No," she went on, calmly, while she watched him from under her drooping eyelashes. "You fancied that I was in love with the handsome Englishman, and the sight of us together maddened you, my friend." She laughed—a low and rippling laugh of perfect understanding, with a scoff in it that was none the less pleasant to the hearing of the roué who had tamed his tiger cat again. "But you missed the chief point of the game, Carlos. You forgot the past—the past of twenty years—the old scores a woman never forgets. You know well that Henry should have married me—that when he brought back from England his white and pink doll of a bride he did me a cruel and infamous wrong. But, despite her coming, I kept his love—I nursed it carefully and sedulously for a time, pretending to love him in return, that I might have my vengeance both on him and on her. You helped me to pay him back in full, my Carlos. But her debt is a long reckoning; it can never be wiped out, while both she and I are alive—to hate each other to the bitter end."

While Medora gave utterance to these appalling thoughts, her voice vibrated with suppressed fury; her fingers gripped convulsively at the crust with which she had been toying; finally she flung it from her with a gesture of passionate scorn.

Da Silva's eyes glittered with delight; in her fine frenzy the handsome gipsy was more adorable than ever; he loved her better still for the very intensity of her hatred—a hatred which his own black heart fully shared.

"You are a devil—a beautiful devil, Medora," he murmured, ecstatically, as he leaned back in his chair the better to admire her in her passion-swept mood.

But stirred though she was by burning memories, Medora was still watching him attentively—reading his every thought. She accepted the homage of his look, and gave a responsive smile. Her voice grew calm again.

"Well, my friend, you yourself know that this English senhor loves that woman's daughter. As regards her husband, we might have been quits; the balance of rightful retaliation was on my side. But it was Henry's wife who really robbed me of my child, for by loving you, Carlos, I lost my little Juanillo. That further grudge between us—between that woman and me—remains unsatisfied till this day. So if, by way of tit for tat, I can break the heart of her chit of a girl, bah, don't you see that my revenge grows very sweet—very sweet, after all these years?"

She was speaking dreamily, as if to herself. But truth quivered in every accent, hovered in the very sigh she drew in self-pitying at the remembrance of her lost child.

The one redeeming touch, however, in Medora's terrible hate—the wistful repining for her child, torn from her owing to the very perversity and stubbornness of her iniquity—was all unnoticed by Carlos da Silva. The coarser fiber of his brain could only comprehend the fierce unrelenting rivalry between lawful wife and mistress. But that appealed to him irresistibly—as a dog fight would have done. He fairly chuckled in his gleeful appreciation of the new situation that the course of events was developing.

"So that is why you set your snares for the senhor, Medora? Ho, ho, I begin to understand. By Jove, you have weathered well. To rob both mother and daughter is a rare achievement indeed. You may well be proud, my lady."

For a moment she eyed him with cold contemptuousness, but she never ceased to hold him by her smile. He missed the scorn of her look; he saw only her pleased acknowledgment of his compliments. She proceeded in her smoot, even tone.

"But more than that, Carlos. The Englishman is here in Rio seeking for my brother, Mariano—Jiminez, they call him now, have you heard? And it was because I refused, or was unable"—she gave a little shoulder-shrug of indifference—"to tell him where Mariano was that he parted from me, angry, last night when you saw us together in my loge. Oh, he did not reject me, as you have insinuated; make no mistake about that, my friend. It is all a question of money, and I came to see that our interests, his and mine, were diametrically opposed. So I sent him right-about face, as you yourself must have noticed; for money, after all, is the main concern—at our time of life, eh, Carlos mine?"

"But you wanted him back, all the same." His reminder was given with a smile of grim irony, but her good temper remained unruffled.

"Ah, I said that to you, last night, no doubt, when I was in a passion—to feed your jealousy with its proper fuel. Oh, I know you, Carlos, if you do not know me. That was the sure way to bring you back to me. For I saw at once that this very money question unites us. Our interests are identical—we stand or fall together, and he, this Englishman, is against the pair of us. But there, I have been stumbling along in the dark up to now. You must tell me more about this will dispute, Carlos." She moved nearer to him, laid a caressing hand upon his arm; her voice became a caress. "You see, we have everything in common. I myself have a legacy, a provision for life, if Henry's old will can be proved."

He glanced at her suspiciously. She sidled closer still, and the old vindictiveness that had so delighted him before came into her voice as she went on.

"Besides, it will be another smack in the face for her—don't you see?—if I can help to despoil her child."

"Who speaks about despoiling?" he asked, bending forward, a wicked gleam in his eyes, that were asking as plainly as eyes could ask, how much Medora really knew.

"Pshut! There need be no subterfuge between you and me, Carlos. I know that the old will was torn up and destroyed. So if it has been resurrected now, there has been—forgery, my friend."

She just whispered the accusing word, and he started apart, ill at ease, although he tried to mask his discomposure under a sickly smile.

"Oh, yes," she went on, gaily nodding her head, "you and I can speak the blunt, brutal truth, Carlos. I can guess that it is old Ferreira who has helped you in this little game—he was always the downy card; the business would be quite to his liking. But it is too bad your keeping me in the dark so long. Here have I been poverty-stricken and hungry—in rags and down at heel—all these weary weeks and months since Henry died. And yet there was this rich legacy coming to me through you and Ferreira. The lawyer would have made me an advance, Carlos, as he has made advances to you, no doubt—eh, is it not so, you clever rascal?"

Da Silva busied himself with the lighting of a fresh cigarette, and said nothing; cunning prompted him to be non-committal at this stage. Medora proceeded, coaxingly.

"Well, it doesn't matter now. We'll prove our claims, and I'll be an heiress after all. By the way, Mariano was one of the witnesses to the old will. Where is Mariano now?"

But the cunning look in his face intensified.

"I don't intend to tell that to anyone till the business is through," he replied, with a complacent smile for his own astuteness.

"Oh, don't imagine that I want ever to see Mariano's face again," she retorted, flaring up anew. "The despicable dog! He spurned me—he left me in the gutter!"

"By my advice, Medora," laughed Carlos, cynically.

Behind the tablecloth she clenched her hands tightly.

"By your advice?"

"Certainly. Mariano and I agreed that you were best out of the affair until everything was satisfactorily concluded."

"Ah! You would have despoiled me also, you pair of beauties?" In her angry surprise she hissed the words at him—there was the fierce gleam of last night's hatred again in her eyes.

"Oh, not that," he answered, coolly. "I always guessed that we should come together again. When we are rich once more, Medora mine, the legacy will be paid," he added, in gentler tone and with a tender glance.

She drew a deep breath; the fire dulled in her eyes, her fingers relaxed; she was regarding him again from under downcast eyelids, softly and enticingly. It was his turn now to stretch forth a caressing hand. She let it rest upon her shoulder. His gaze became impassioned.

"Come, now," he murmured, "that is enough talk for the present. Another glass of champagne. Then let us go home."

"No, not tonight, as I said before," she rejoined, firmly, yet still with a wooing smile. "You forget the bloodhounds, my Carlos." As she spoke, she poured out the wine.

"They have already been sent away, carissima," he responded, raising his glass to his lips, pledging her with amorous eyes.

"Where?" The question fell quite unconcernedly. He saw only the responsive love-light in her steady glance; she had let her hand fall into his.

"To the island," he answered, for the momentary glow of passion, the warming thrill of the wine, the pressure of her soft fingers, had combined to dissipate the distrust and reserve of five minutes ago.

She took the information still with light indifference.

"Ah, they are at Mora's," she said, slowly and reflectively. "So our English senhor is with Mora—under safe keeping with Mora. That is good. His little miss of a sweetheart won't find him there very easily."

"I don't intend that she will," he replied, with grim dryness. "Tomorrow, Medora, we'll go down together. We'll see how the fellow takes his gruel."

"I would give you one word of advice, Carlos. Do not kill him, my friend. You would have the British Embassy on us for a certainty."

"Poof! Who will ever know where he has disappeared to? But I mean to make him renounce this will business, first of all. He might elect to buy his liberty through his lady friends, eh? That would be a master stroke, Medora. Strip them, and humble him, and then fool him in the end. Oh, yes, I owe him six inches of steel. Our revenge, both yours and mine, won't be quite complete without the six inches of cold steel, will it sweetheart?"

She had been stroking his hand; but she dropped it now.

"Well, at all events, that will come later. Tomorrow we shall force him to drop this litigation. I want my legacy, Carlos, you see," she went on, laughing. "And an advance tonight, please. Oh, yes, old Ferreira will bleed again, and you told me you have been winning at the club. Tomorrow morning early I wish to be with my dressmaker. I'll go back to Madame Voisin. Meet me at her place at eleven, Carlos, and then we'll drive down to the island."

"But tonight, Medora. Let me plead with you once more."

"No, no; I must have clothes before I come back to Petropolis—before I can even be seen with you again. Go to your club for tonight; keep up the run of luck while it lasts. That used to be your old rule, Carlos."

He looked irresolute; she had thrown out the one lure which could beguile him elsewhere, and rid her of his company without causing irritation and unpleasantness. While still debating with himself, as if to take counsel of the capital at his disposal, he drew a bunch of bank notes from his pocket, and spread them on the table. Medora's fingers stole among the slips of paper.

"There, I shall take just a few," she said, pleasantly. "Tomorrow you will give me more, and the old life will begin anew. Yes, I promise. Tomorrow I shall dine with you—at home. And after dinner you will be my escort to the music hall," she added, in a rallying tone and with a mischevious arching of her eyebrows. "I need a protector, you see, among so many ardent admirers."

"No, no; never again, never there, Medora," he exclaimed, with fervency. "You are only for me now—for me alone."

She let him capture and kiss the hand that had gathered her spoil.

"Well, well, be it so, you foolish fellow. In the morning I shall send in my demission—that's the correct word for a great artiste, isn't it? Now, here's a pretty bother; I have no purse—neither pocket nor purse, Carlos. But this menu will serve;" and she laid the notes between the folding square of cardboard, then slipped the package within the bosom of her dress.

It was nearly one o'clock now, and the crowd was thinning in the supper-rooms.

"Send the waiter for a cab, Carlos. You will drop me at my lodgings. Oh, yes, I go there—to my humble little room, for the last time. Then tomorrow at eleven—at Madame Voisin's place. She has always costumes ready, and knows my style. You won't recognize me when we meet again, my love." Medora drew her mantle closer around her tinsel stage garments. "Now, let us be gone."

Don Carlos rattled the dice again that night. But he lost this time. His run of luck had turned.

CHAPTER XXV.
HELD IN BONDAGE.

A tiny bay, a tiny island—one of the numerous bays that indent the shore, one of the numerous islands that dot the surface of Rio de Janeiro's spacious, land-locked harbor. Thihter had Basendale been transported by the ruffians who had waylaid and sandbagged him when quitting the precincts of the café chantant. He remembered little of the actual assault, nothing of the few hours' stay in the den of the Abbess; the drive through the night streets was but a confused and rumbling memory. The day was well advanced before his senses returned, before he could drag his bruised and battered frame from the bed on which he had found himself lying. With limbs tottering, head still buzzing, he staggered towards the iron-barred aperture through which the sunshine was streaming in a broad band of yellow.

For many minutes, holding on to the rusted bars, he was only conscious of the divine joy of inhaling into his lungs the pure and fragrant breath of the outer day. Then other sensations gradually stole upon him. He heard the continuous, murmurous lapping of water at a little distance; through the interstices of heavy leafage he could see a mirror-like sheen. Soon he began to observe details, and to make inferences. These clustering shrubs, with their seeding flowers casting down rootlets to seek the ground, were mangroves; the water beyond was the sea, the harbor of Rio—he knew it by its deep, amethyst blue, he could even distinguish now the distant, pulsating thud of a steamer's propeller.

Then he turned to survey his prison-house.

Yet, except for the iron bars at the unglazed window, there was little suggestion of a prison about the chamber wherein he was held in bondage. True, the door of rough-hewn mahogany planks was a heavy one, but there was furniture in the room—elegant and dainty furniture too—dressing table, wash stand, wardrobe, even a cheval-glass swung upon richly carved supports. And the bed upon which he had reposed, although devoid of linen, had its mattresses and its pillows, also its mosquito net tied aloft to the supporting rods. But, ah, there had been no tender hand to drop the net for the greater comfort of his long heavy sleep; the pain of stung face, and neck, and arms, came to him now, and recalled dimly the tossing, feverish agony of the black night, that had seemed unending, never destined to end.

But, though the room was comfortably equipped, there were everywhere the dust of disuse, the cobwebs of neglect, the mildewed atmosphere of desolation. A broom to walls and floor, however, sheets for the bed, towels for the rail, a toilet-cover for the dressing-table, a touch of drapery for the mirror, would have made the place habitable in half an hour—yes, not only habitable, but a perfect little bower of luxury as well.

At this reflection came a surge of confused memories, and the prisoner dropped feebly into a chair. Was he in the abode of the woman Medora, the fell sorceress who had inveigled him, who had trapped him by foul means when fair means had failed? The mere notion of such a possibility filled him with terrible disquietude, and, bending forward, he buried his face in his hands. He thought of Doreen, of Mrs. da Silva, and, if there had not been stern resolution creeping even now back into his heart, he could have wept aloud in the agony of his helpless despair. But he sat very still, very quiet, conjuring by sheer force of will the stray remembrances of that fateful night, piecing them together, shaping the harlequin jumble of ideas into a clear and lucid story of what had happened. There were dead-black spots where memory was helpless, dull spots which only reasoning could illume. But at last he understood everything.

That morning, in the midst of his confused dreaming, he had been dimly conscious of the distant howling of hungry wolves, of a satanic face, with a torch between its lips, that had leered down upon him as he had lain upon his bed of pain. It had all passed like the phantasmagoria of a hideous nightmare, but recollection brought back the vision, and calm logic could now dissolve the fog of illusion from the substance of fact—could turn the wolves to bloodhounds, the devil to a man, the torch to a commonplace cigar.

Basendale rose to his feet, the light of conviction on his face.

Yes; he was in the power of Carlos da Silva, and it was the fiend Medora who had betrayed him into his enemy's hands. Heavens! What a fool he had been!—to have followed her, to have trusted her for a single moment, with his knowledge of her past record. A fool! A fool! A simple fool yet once again! And as the bitter reflection came to him he thought of Conover—of Conover's sneers over his many failures of the past, of Conover's triumph now when he would know that he had failed yet once again, that he had been hoodwinked like the most gullible child.

His hands had clenched instinctively, and now he swung them high aloft.

"By all the powers," he murmured, "the victory is not yet for Carlos da Silva. Never, never, while there is a breath of life left in my body."

But a tinge of excruciating pain shot through his injured arm, and with a groan he dropped it to his side.

The silk handkerchief he had worn and used as a sling was still suspended from his neck. With stoical fortitude Basendale now adjusted it, and gave the swollen, bruised elbow, the throbbing, inflamed muscles, the support they so badly required. This done, he again uplifted his sound right arm; he repeated his vow.

"Never, never, by thunder, while I can strike one blow with this."

The soldier was thoroughly himself again. He felt for his watch; it was there, and still going. Eleven o'clock. He turned the stem-winder; the spring had almost run down, but he had the time of day safe now, and this in itself brought him some relief of mind, for there is nothing more trying in solitary confinement than the unrecorded passage of the hours.

Basendale next strode to the door. There was no lock. He shook its beams, but they yielded never an inch.

"Barred or padlocked on the outside," was his mental note.

Then he crossed to the window, gripped the iron grating, pressed it from him, drew it to him, shook it with all his might. But there was no bending, no loosening of a socket-hold.

"No, only a file or a hammer can get this down."

He paused to reflect, his fingers still resting, lightly now, on the metal barriers to freedom. He became conscious of a slobbery growl below the window frame; then there broke forth a deep bell-toned bay that told its own tale.

Outside were Da Silva's bloodhounds.

Soon he heard a low whistle, only a few yards away, and the barking instantly ceased. Yes; there were men, too, on sentry duty.

He was ringed in by triple guards—iron bars, and dogs, and hireling desperadoes.

Basendale now recalled to memory the man with the strip of red flannel round his throat—the fellow who had asked for a light to his cigarette in the bottle-neck of the cul de sac, who had tried to strangle him, who had brought his fellow-scoundrels to his aid, when they had hustled their victim into the entry and down on the floor, when the blinding stars had come and then forgetfulness.

But the note of the watchful dog had disturbed the household; there was a soft, stealthy footfall in the passage, coming nearer and nearer, then suddenly hushed. Basendale knew that there was a human being, a human tiger, breathing on the other side of the door. He held his own breath while the other listened. A full minute passed before there was the pat-pat of the footsteps once more, retreating now whence they had come. All was stillness and silence again—except for the murmur of the breeze through the mangroves, the lapping of the tide, the throbbing of the steamer's propeller, now faint and far-away.

The captive sat himself down on the edge of the bed, to think, to weigh the chances of escape, the possibilities of delivery.

Thus he remained until his reveries were broken by renewed sounds in the corridor. This time there was no furtiveness; the tread was firm and bold; an iron bolt was thrown back; the door was opened. It was the man with the flannel neck-band who entered. He brought food—a plate of meat and bread, a flagon of red wine, a cup of black coffee. The fellow muttered a—"buenos dias, senhor," as he laid the tray upon the dressing-table. But his hang-dog eyes did not meet the Englishman's stern, questioning look, and not another word passed ere the gaoler stepped back and closed the door behind him. The prisoner was alone again. He looked at his watch; the hour was noon.

Basendale ate and drank, resolutely. Poison in his food? Pshaw! He put the thought away, the instant it had suggested itself. There was no need for a lethal drug, when long before cold steel could have served. So he partook of the fare provided, for not only was he hungry, but he knew well that strength must be conserved, if possible must be fortified, in view of the contingencies that any hour might bring. They had not trusted him with a knife; but his fingers served; and the wine, much like a generous burgundy, brought back the color to his cheeks, renewed the courage to his heart, hopefulness amidst surroundings that seemed utterly devoid of hope.

Beside his tray he found a couple of long, thin cigars, with half a dozen lucifers. The tobacco was only the coarsest and commonest kind of the country, but he smoked it none the less with grateful relish. The mere drawing of the whiffs, the fashioning of the fleecy spirals, gave some occupation, some surcease from brooding. For Basendale saw no way out; he was resigning himself to the thought that events would necessarily decide for him the issue. He must just be nerved and prepared to grasp the opportunity when it came.

He had not yet contrived to pass beyond this mood of alert and resolute expectancy, when the barking of the dogs again broke the silence outside. Harkening, he made sure that he could distinguish the rhytmic thump, thump, thump of oars working in rowlocks; and then he caught the sound of voices—the half-frightened, half-playful scream of a woman's voice, the sharp call of a man's voice bidding the hounds be still.

There was silence again for a few minutes; but Basendale knew who were coming before he next heard steps in the passage, the rattle of the iron bolt, the swing of the door on its hinges.

It was Carlos da Silva who stood in the entry, grim and cynically smiling; and behind him was Medora, no longer the tattered gypsy of the roadside; no longer the tawdry singer of the café chantant, but a bewildering vision of silks and laces and jewels. And she was smiling gaily toward her companion and toward her victim.

If Basendale had ever for a moment imagined that he had plumbed the depths of this woman's infamy when, on the occasion of their first interview at the music hall, she had told him the shameful story of her life, he was thoroughly disillusioned now. Her hate for Carlos da Silva had been assumed, her vow of vengeance had been a mockery, the pitiful little romance about her lost child a lying invention—all that she might lure him into the clutches of her paramour, his enemy, who would do him ruthlessly to death so that Doreen might the more easily be despoiled.

And if his look had not been one of proud scorn that second night when he had repelled her advances, it was one of utter loathing now as he stepped back from her contaminating presence—back to the grated window where he could at least breathe the pure air of the sea and heaven.

At sight of his consternation, at quick understanding of his abhorrence, Medora only laughed aloud—a low, musical, rippling laugh of mingled amusement and triumph. But, while she laughed, it was at Don Carlos she looked, not at the English senhor.

New Idea in Telephones.

A portable telephone is the latest thing out, and it is the conception of a Swedish, not an American, inventor. The specimens of the device that have been sent to other countries have elicited unstinted praise from Austrian, Russian, Greek and Turkish experts who have tested them, and, while large demands and inquiries for the new phone have come from France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Portugal and the United States, those from Great Britain have been even more noticeable.

Within the cylinder of the telephone is a small dry cell, the whole apparatus (including both receiver and mouthpiece) being small enough to go in the pocket. With each instrument is a coil of thin copper wire, and it is reckoned that a soldier could easily carry 12,000 feet of this wire with him.

The uses suggested for the portable telephone are innumerable, military considerations being kept specially to the front. Outposts, it is declared, could by its aid keep in constant communication with the main force, and it is pointed out that it would furnish a valuable means of keeping in touch with headquarters for police and fire brigades. For use between railway coaches on a moving train, for engineers at work underground or on great public works, for steamers, for cyclists and in many other fields it would be most desirable.—[Omaha Bee.

Men Try My Cure Free

I ask not one penny in advance pay me when cured.

I know the terrible mental torture of the

made a man among men, and then refuse to pay dollars for aiding him to become so? I say no, wonderful success backs up my judgment. I every sufferer knew that the effect of Electricity the weak, debilitated man is the same as rain parched field in summer. He may be debilitated varicocele, losses, impotency; may have confused ideas; fear to act and decide; gloomy forebodings, and fretful; avoid friends and company; without dence in himself to face the slighted responsibility, let him properly apply Electricity for but a few and all these symptoms vanish—giving way to soothing vigor through every weak part. A few to a couple of months' use of this treatment them forever, and make strong, confident, manly out of the puniest weaklings. For nearly 40 years I have treated and restored weak men through world-famed invention, and am still doing so with greater success than ever. In fact I do not to fail in any case of this kind, and therefore as most men are more or less skeptical, I will tinue to give my Herculex

Dr. Sanden Electric Belt Free Until Cure and as said, not one cent is to be paid me in advance or on deposit. Call or write and get the and use, say for 60 days, and if cured pay me price of belt only—many cases low as $4—if not return the belt and the deal is ended. But I know what the belt will do, and will take the risk pay when you are cured. I also give my belts on same terms in Rheumatism, Lame Back, Kidney and Liver Complaints, etc. Think of a remedy that has stood every possible test for 40 years—the only one ever successfully given to sufferers on its own merits!

As the originator and founder of the electric-belt system of treatment my 40 years' success is the envy and my belts of course are imitated. (What good thing is not?) I am therefore compelled to caution you ceived, as the genuine Herculex Dr. Sanden Electric Belt cannot be had anywhere on the Coast except at the below. But my great knowledge to advise and direct my patients is mine alone and cannot be imitated, and

Call or send today for my belt. Or if you want to look into the matter further I have the two best

HOME-COMING OF CHEMULPO CREWS.

Wild Enthusiasm in Russian Territory Upon the Return of the Survivors of the Ill-fated Cruisers Variag and Korietz.

[The following copyrighted letter from John Callan O. Laughlin, Collier's special war correspondent at St. Petersburg, is printed from advance sheets of Collier's Weekly, by special arrangement with the management.]

ST. PETERSBURG, April 10.—When the survivors of the Variag and Korietz arrived in Russian territory, M. de Plehve, the Minister of the Interior, raised the prohibition against patriotic demonstrations. The removal of the lid permitted an outburst of feeling not less intense than that I have seen in other countries in time of war. The people became almost delirious with patriotic exultation, and they were roused, it should be noted, not by returning conquerors, but by men who, however gallant their conduct, had suffered complete defeat.

Thus the welcome given by Russia to her first heroes of the war with Japan has more than passing interest. It is a substantial indication of the depth of the feeling of the Russian people in connection with the Far Eastern conflict, and it must be regarded as an event of political importance which foreign nations can not afford to disregard. Public opinion has no influence upon the policy of the Czar, but the emergencies of war demand a united people, and the attitude of the hundreds of thousands who took part in the ovations to the Chemulpo fighters has shown the government, according to its declarations, that it need have no fear of internal strife while the war is in progress.

Everything emanates from above in the Land of the Bear. His Majesty [illegible] a button, his Ministers respond to the signal and pass it to their subordinates; the later act and then the people move. The Czar's [illegible] of the conduct of his sailors was shown by their decoration with the [illegible] Cross of St. George. News of the honor done them was cabled to Capt. Stepanoff and his subordinates when they reached Suez. Upon the arrival at Constantinople of the steamer Malaya, which was bringing them home, the Unspeakable Turk, [illegible] disregard of the valor of the passengers, held her in quarantine for twenty-four hours. Russia [illegible] the new delay.

[illegible] MAKES A HOLIDAY.

[illegible] Odessa, the industrial [illegible] of the Black Sea, and one of the [illegible]posing cities of the empire, [illegible] to receive magnificently [illegible] countrymen; and [illegible] mean not only the Christian [illegible] Jewish population as well. [illegible] frequently happens in Russia [illegible] police will send flags to a [illegible] with instructions to decorate [illegible]ward submit the bill. No [illegible]cation was necessary at the [illegible] port. The beautiful Nicholas boulevard, lying above the sea, was transformed into a court of [illegible] Venetian masts stood with all the regularity of telegraph poles on both sides of the street. Flags [illegible] from the windows of magnificent [illegible] and less striking buildings, and triumphant arches bearing the inscription "To the Heroes of Chemulpo" stretched across the thoroughfare. Lavish as were the decorations on the boulevard and other less prominent streets, they had little of the [illegible] of those which mark national festivities in the United States. [illegible] bore the imprint of powerful [illegible] and were arranged with Cri[illegible]

[illegible] city was ready for the fête [illegible] salvo of great guns, fired by the Alexander battery, announced the Malaya had appeared upon the horizon. A cheer from the waiting people crowding the quay on that April day testified their gratitude at the approach of the men who fought for them and for the flag. A second salvo, and at [illegible] a fleet of steamers and [illegible] laden with passengers, whose [illegible] almost drowned the martial [illegible] of the bands accompanying [illegible] the forward movement of the incoming ship. In the lead [illegible] launch of the commandant of the port, and by his side was a [illegible] parcel which he carried [illegible] when he boarded the Malaya. After exchanging greetings [illegible] Capt. Stepanoff and his men [illegible] the parcel and took from [illegible] crosses of St. George. "My [illegible]," he said, "are to deliver [illegible] decorations before you arrive."

[illegible] BY MILITARY AND [illegible]OUS FUNCTIONARIES.

[illegible] as the Malaya tied up to [illegible] Capt. Stepanoff passed down [illegible] to receive the greetings [illegible] Kaulbars, commandant of the Military District, and [illegible] distinguished military, civil and [illegible] functionaries. The scene [illegible] and picturesque. The [illegible] modestly dressed, was [illegible] recipient of honors offered by those priests in robes [illegible] cloth of gold sweeping [illegible], by the military and naval [illegible] garbed in gorgeous full [illegible], and by civic officials [illegible] but none the less striking. Near by soldiers and [illegible] drawn up, with arms at [illegible] behind them was a cheering [illegible] people, who looked at [illegible] and then past him to the [illegible] Malaya, where were [illegible] men who had fought with [illegible] the official words of welcome exchanged, Stepanoff re[illegible] the ship, and, giving the order [illegible] followers, marched at [illegible] down the gangway. All [illegible] uniform of the British navy, [illegible] been supplied by the English [illegible]-war Talbot immediately [illegible] battle. A third salvo of [illegible] welcomed them to shore, [illegible] bands of 20,000 troops [illegible] the national anthem "God Save the Czar." To the granite stairway, which leads from the port of Odessa to the city, the survivors marched through two lines of saluting sailors and soldiers. At the foot of the stairway the military gave way to young students of the universities, standing side by side and forming two rows, which stretched past the bronze statue of the Duc de Richelieu, at the head of the stairway, down the Nicolas boulevard. Before the Richelieu statue were gathered representatives of the church, the municipality and the district administration, who welcomed the survivors to the city. Here the latter received a blessing and reverently kissed the cross. The procession then turned into the Nicolas boulevard, where 200,000 people joined in a roar of welcome. Not satisfied with this demonstration, the people swept through the lines of students and police and seized the survivors, bearded men pressing their lips upon bearded cheeks with an enthusiasm that would have been the better understood by an American had the objects of the caresses been fair young girls. Some of the people's heroes were hoisted upon brawny shoulders and carried in this fashion, and crowds struggled and shoved to get near enough to touch the hands of the men whom they were worshipping. Somewhat rumpled but thoroughly pleased by the rough attentions showered upon them, the survivors reached the City Hall where they were received by the City Fathers. The latter offered bread and salt to Capt. Stepanoff upon a silver platter inscribed: "Welcome of Odessa to the heroes of the Variag and Korietz, whose deeds astounded the world."

For twenty-four hours Odessa feasted and gave free rein to her frantic enthusiasm for her guests. Then the latter, in the auxiliary cruiser Nicolai II, proceeded to the military port of Sebastopol—the sturdy resistance of which in the Crimean war will be duplicated, if necessary, Russians say, at Port Arthur. A torpedo boat flying the signal, "Welcome to the Brave," was first sighted from the Malaya. Slowly came into view the whole of the Black Sea fleet, from its masts flying the flags that Russian men-of-war always hoist when going into action. The thunderous roar of cannon afloat and ashore intermingled, and the faint echo of the cheers of the military, the nobility, and the people came across the water. The survivors answered with a loud hurrah, which was caught up by the sailors of the fleet and thus carried to the shore.

SKRYDLOFF GIVES STEPANOFF HIS MEDAL.

Sebastopol's reception was more of a military character than had been that of Odessa. The temper of the people had been shown at the latter port; the attitude of those gathered at Sebastopol indicated the feelings of the military. The Russian stronghold was not as gorgeously decorated as Odessa had been, but its welcome was not a whit less hearty. Vice-Admiral Skrydloff, commanding the Black Sea fleet, who had commanded the Pacific squadron, warmly embraced Stepanoff. "In the fight," said the latter, "I did not forget your orders and instructions. We lost, but we fought as hard as we could, and we did not give up our ships." That night at a banquet, Skrydloff took from his breast the St. George's cross, gained in the Russo-Turkish war of 1878, and pinned it upon Stepanoff. "I have worn that cross for twenty-six years," he said, "and here in Sebastopol, whose soil is rich with the blood of Russian heroes, I give it to you, another hero, and wish you happiness and health."

But a portion of the crews of the Variage and Korietz were brought to Russia by the Malaya. The remainder came home two weeks later via Marseilles. When the survivors were reunited they were ordered to St. Petersburg. Immense crowds greeted them along the route. At Moscow they were given an ovation such as had not been exceeded probably by any previous demonstration in that old capital. St. Petersburg decorated in their honor, troops gave them a military reception, and the people let loose the enthusiasm pent up by long waiting. The welcome of the nation was crowned by audience granted by the Emperor to the officers and men of the sunken ships.

Gifts of money, of jewels, of clothing were showered upon the survivors by the Emperor, the nobility, and the peasantry. The sailors and soldiers who are fighting in the East, and those who remain at home, were shown the depth of the nation's gratitude; and they may expect like treatment if they, too, dare bravely for the honor of the flag.

THE CORRESPONDENTS.

HOW THE JAPS JOLLIED THEM.

[The following article from Richard Harding Davis, Collier's special war correspondent in Japan, is reprinted from advance sheets of Collier's Weekly.]

TOKIO, March 29, 1904.—Each time the War Office here announces that the advance of the army has been again postponed, those terrible dogs of war, the war correspondents, cry "havoc," and try to slip their chains. And the answer of the Japanese officials to their demand that they instantly be shown "battle, murder, and sudden death," is to invite them to a garden party. This is supposed to soothe the correspondents, and to satisfy the proprietors of their papers at home, who are sending them rich drafts and singing sadly, "It's All Going Out, and There's Nothing Coming In."

A few nights since the members of Parliament gave a dinner to the military attachés and the war correspondents, at which they asked us to be patient. As a sop, diplomatically administered, and intended to reconcile us to being bottled up in Tokio, it did not altogether carry its purpose, but as an act of hospitality, as a dinner of ceremony, and, in so far as it illustrated the courtesy and thoughtfulness of the Japanese, it was a charming success. It also is interesting, when one compares it as an entertainment with one that would be given to strangers in Washington by our own members of Congress.

We went to the dinner in jinrikishas, each with an accordion-plaited paper lantern bobbing fantastically in the night like a giant firefly, and stopped at a house that glowed among the surrounding trees, not from any windows, as it had no windows, but through its walls. It glowed most brilliantly through a square low doorway in which stood many little girls in gray kimonos with glistening black hair, worn a la Pompadour, and who bowed and rubbed their knees with their open palms, continually shifting from one stockinged foot to the other, and bowing and bowing again. They took away our shoes and gave us big woolen slippers, and then led us down corridors and along outer galleries into a room which ran the length of the tea house. It was covered with mats. Not with what we call mats, but with what is more like a mattress with a piece of fine matting sewn on its top. These mattresses were sunk between broad grooves of beautifully polished wood, and with the wooden beams formed the floor on which we walked, the floor on which we sat, the floor from which we ate. When strangers to Japan object to removing their shoes, and walk with boots upon a Japanese mattress, they shock their host just as thoroughly as it would shock an American hostess to see her visitor stamp with his boots upon the lid of her piano or on her damask tablecloth.

The room of the tea house was bare of all furniture, and even of ornaments, save the decorated screens that formed the walls and the decorated beams that supported the decorated ceiling. The room was its own ornament. The panels on the walls were of native woods of great beauty, and on some in bas-relief were carved flowers, dragons, and landscapes. It was like feasting in an enlarged glove box. From time to time one of the nesans, as they call the little girls who serve the dinner, would push back a paper screen with its squares of glistening black lacquer, and we could see outside swinging from the balcony cherry-red lanterns, and beyond them the chill spring moonlight and the black pines of Shiba Park. We sat on flat cushions of crimson silk, each with his back to the wall, in a long row that stretched around the room.

When we had last seen our hosts, when the Mikado addressed them in their House of Parliament, they were in our evening dress. Now, they wore their national costume the skirts of cloth, silk, or brocade, and, folded over the chest like an abbreviated bathrobe, the kimono. There was no brilliant color in any of the costumes. They all were gray, brown, black. The room was heated by braziers of brass set in wooden boxes and filled with hot ashes over which the Japanese passed their hands continually, as though performing an incantation.

A Japanese dinner begins at the end with the sweets, and then starts over again with soup. A nesan placed in front of each guest a box filled with cakes, candy, and sugared fruit. The guest is not supposed to eat this, but to save it until the dinner is over, when he packs whatever parts of the dinner he has not eaten in the box and carries the box home. After the little girl had explained with much shaking of her head that we must not eat the sweets, she brought us a tiny lacquer table that stood about six inches from the floor, a blue and white bottle filled with saki [which tastes like warm sherry,] a saucer of salt and mustard, a saki cup, a bowl in which to rinse the saki cup before we offer it to anyone with whom we wish to drink a toast, and a pair of chopsticks. Soup followed on a lacquered bowl, then hot fish, and, on a gridiron of glass rods, raw fish. The soup and the hot fish were as deliciously cooked as at the oldest and best of Paris restaurants, but the raw fish was a novelty which even the bravest military attache and the politest correspondent dared not attempt. After that the dishes no longer came in courses, but were placed at the same time in rich profusion upon the tiny tables. Many with which we were familiar were so served that we failed to recognize them, and other dishes we thought were those we knew at home we ate in blissful ignorance that they were not. Some kidneys I especially welcomed. "Ah!" exclaimed one of the polite hosts, "I see you like very much our devil fish." I had seen devil fish in the aquarium at Naples, but I never before had hungered for one. Of course, the chopsticks were baffling, and of how many other breaches of etiquette we were guilty one blushes to guess. The next night I dined after the European fashion, and when I saw how adroitly the Japanese officers at the dinner followed it, I was amazed at our temerity of the night previous. For the first time I became conscious that the customs of our table are full of pitfalls. As someone has said, the Romans were able to conquer the world because they did not have to stay at home and learn their own language.

But no one of the Japanese members of Parliament made any sign that we were not eating with perfect propriety, though we must surely have shocked them. Many of the Americans and English could not understand that the little girls who knelt in front of them were not to be admired and complimented, but were there simply as waitresses. And when the Japanese heard their guests address them as "Maimie" and "Maude," they must in their artless Japanese way have congratulated themselves that when they determined to copy us they knew where to stop. Of course, it is very hard for the visitor to take the little nesans as seriously as they take themselves. The whole situation is unfamiliar. We do not often sit cross-legged, while quaintly dressed handmaidens kneel and bow before us. To the gallant American the occasion seems to demand that the least he can do is treat the young lady as one of the guests. As a matter of fact, one is supposed to treat her with every politeness, even if you speak Japanese, to discuss the food with her, and to give her the saki cup that she may drink with you, but it does not follow that you need necessarily address her as "Good-morning Carrie."

Our hosts probably knew we did not offend with knowledge, and the little girls themselves accepted invitations to drink, and did drink, after a most polite ceremonial, and, when our chopsticks refused to work, and we spilled our food, shivered and giggled with delight, and covered their eyes with their hands.

After the dinner and the speeches, they gathered up the sweets and wrapped the boxes we were to carry home in napkins.

And then they cleared the floor for the geisha girls.

The geisha is—but, no in this peace-ridden city, so far removed from "war and the rumors of wars," where the coming of the cherry blossoms is the one event of vital interest, the geisha becomes a subject of too serious moment to be wasted in a paragraph. It must be saved for another steamer day.

PEER WITH A ROMANTIC HISTORY.

Lord Lyveden, in the Center, With Dr. H. S. Lunn and Cumming Macdona, M. P., Who Helped Him to Arrange the Coming Tour to the United States.

ONLY NEGROES THERE.

Town of Goldsboro, Fla., Has no Other Nationality Within Its Precincts.

[Minneapolis Tribune:] A unique town in Florida is Goldsboro, a place peopled entirely by negroes. Goldsboro is 127 miles from Jacksonville on the Atlantic Coast Line Railway, between the Florida metropolis and Tampa. Within its precincts no white person nor member of any other nationality is found and a negro mayor and negro Councilmen dictate the destinies of the community. A negro postmaster appointed under a Democratic administration has charge of the mail service and dark-skinned night watchmen look after the stores and shops between sun and sun.

The school system is, of course, operated under the regular guidance of the public school laws of the State and applicants for positions as pedagogues are examined by the Orange county school board.

Withal Goldsboro, which has 300 population, and is well governed. There are few radical discords. The Town Jail is in great disrepute, and the population pays its taxes about on an average with the ratio of whites in other Florida communities. With but few exceptions negroes own every foot of land in Goldsboro, and that which they do not own they are purchasing on the installment plan from white people who hold deeds for the properties.

The town is ten years old from the point of incorporation, and there have never been any riots or unusual disorders to mar its record.

The community is very religious and has three churches with rapidly-growing membership rolls. A unique spectacle on Sundays during the spring and summer of each year is to see the devotional exercises attendant upon the administration of the rites of baptism, which is not conducted without loud and fervent crescendos of thankfulness.

Goldsboro, however, has its sinners. It has one chronic sinner, who belongs to no church in particular, and it is reported among his own people that Uncle Abe professed religion twenty-one different times in one spring and summer—and was baptised that number of times, or seven times by each church in the settlement—each time falling back in the mire of the wicked.

The negro municipality is the home of the independent voter. Each individual votes as his conscience dictates. The absence of white citizens has removed the source that frequently contaminates the negro voter, although it is told that upon one occasion an aldermanic election was bought through the influence of a barrel of whisky.

The relations between the town of Goldsboro and the neighboring town of Sanford, two miles distant, peopled mainly by whites, are friendly, and there is an interchange of business between the two municipalities. The Mayor of Goldsboro is a frequent visitor in Sanford, although it has not been recorded that the latter town has entertained the executive from Goldsboro at any State or private dinner parties.

An Early Beginning.

The Bridegroom: Would you mind if I went into the smoking apartment, dear?

The Bride: What, to smoke?

The Bridegroom: Oh, dear, no; I want to experience the agony of being away from you so that the joy of my return will be more intensified.—[Chicago Journal.

WILL STUDY OUR CITIES.

Company of Great Britain's Mayors Coming.

Want to Pick up Points on City Government.

Bringing Their Wives With Them to St. Louis.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 16.—When the St. Louis sails from Southampton on May 14 she will carry an imposing delegation of English, Scotch and Irish Mayors, ex-Mayors and chairmen of borough councils, and other varieties of City Fathers, who are going over to see how some of the principal American cities are governed and to pick up points for the possible improvement of municipal government in Great Britain. Incidentally they are taking their wives and daughters along to see the St. Louis Exposition and have a good time generally, all at their own expense.

The visit will be the outcome of an interview Lord Lyveden had last year with the Mayor of Philadelphia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Governor of Missouri. They assured his lordship that an organized municipal party would be welcomed heartily to the United States, and pointed out that such a visit would materially promote the friendly interests of England and America. Lord Lyveden feared that to make such a party thoroughly representative of the municipalities of the United Kingdom was too huge an undertaking. He communicated the suggestions, however, to the Lord Mayor of London, with the result that a committee was organized to get the views of the municipalities throughout the country. The response was encouraging and the following formed themselves into an executive committee to carry the scheme through:

The Right Hon. Lord Lyveden, chairman; Sir Thomas H. Brooke-Hitching, ex-Sheriff of London, vice-chairman; Sir Thomas D. Pile, Bart. ex-Lord Mayor, Dublin, honorable secretary; Sir Alfred D. Newton, Bart., ex-Lord Mayor, London; James Bailey, M. P., Kensington Board Council; E. A. Cornwall, vice-chairman, London county Council; J. A. Lile, corporation city of London; D. George Collins, corporation of city of London, chairman of the city of London International Commercial Association; A. K. Carlyon, Middlesex County Council; Richard Burbridge, Barnes District Council.

All these men will be members of the party and their names are a sufficient guarantee that the affair will be substantial.

The organizers of this municipal tour thought that the sum of $395, which is the inclusive price for the tour, would be somewhat prohibitive, and that only a hundred or two of their municipal brethern would care to go to the expense. The applications turn out to be double the number so that the committee is now confronted with the unenviable task of weeding out.

After arriving in New York the delegation will "do" the city for three days and then leave for Philadelphia and Washington. While in Washington they will be entertained by the President. They hope to reach St. Louis about June 1, where they will stay for a week. On June 9, they will reach Niagara, proceeding to Toronto and thence to New York where the party will break up, some to return home, and some to make a more extended tour of the United States.

Lord Lyveden is, of course, one of the most interesting men on the committee. His adventurous career as actor, purser, waiter and what-not has been pretty fully described already. He has now settled down to the serious work of helping to govern his countrymen instead of amusing them from behind the footlights. A few days ago he was sitting on a committee that was inquiring into the enlargement of the Cardiff Docks, and it is said that he took an active and intelligent interest in the subject.

Next in point of interest to His Lordship comes the ex-Lord Mayor of Dublin. In the early nineties Thomas Pile, although an Englishman born, was more Irish than the Irish themselves. He carried on an extensive fish business in Dublin, entered enthusiastically into the Nationalist movement, and clinging tenaciously to Parnell during the most exciting days of that remarkable man's career, was rewarded with the Mayoralty of Dublin as the price of his allegiance. Little did Parnell think that the elevation of the fish merchant was a stepping-stone to a baronetcy. After Parnell's death, when the late Queen visited Ireland, Thomas Pile, in spite of the violent protest of a majority of the Dublin corporation, presented an address of welcome to Her Majesty, and as the price of his allegiance to his sovereign he received his knighthood. The coronation honors brought him his baronetcy. The royal patronage did not help to increase his popularity with the people of Dublin, and Sir Thomas, after his carriage had been several times assailed with putrid cod's heads, to remind him of his calling, determined to return to the bosom of his own countrymen, and he says that he is now settled permanently in London. England has already commenced to shower honors on him afresh. He is a keen business man and the success of the proposed visit to the United States will be largely due to his efforts.

D. George Collins, another member of the committee, has done more than any other man in England to foster and promote good feeling between commercial communities. He is continually arranging conferences between England and the representatives of foreign countries with the view of bringing about a favorable understanding on questions affecting international interests.
